TO FREE REPUBLICAN PARTY FROM THE INTERESTS

This Is Mission of so-Called "Insurgents" in the State, Says Vincent.

GIVES ADDRESS HERE

Candidate for Gubernatorial Nomination to Talk in Temple Theater Tomorrow

To free the Republican party in Colorado from the control of private business interests, making it an instrument of genuine government by the people, according to Merle D Vincent, is the object of the so-called "insurgent" Republicans Mr Vincent, who is stumping the state in his own behalf as candidate for Governor as an independent "insurgent" Republican, arrived in Colorado Springs yesterday and will speak tomorrow night at 8 30 o'clock in Temple Theater, leaving Tuesday for Boulder. In speaking of the subject in question, Mr Vincent said yesterday:

"We are entering upon a fight to

MERLE D. VINCENT,
"Insurgent" Republican Who Speaks at Temple Theater Tomorrow Night

free the Republican party from the control of private business interests and to make it an instrument of genuine government by the people.

"We take the position that a good government honestly administered is the best business asset a people can possess. To obtain this kind of government in Colorado, we must have laws under which the people can, by votes, nominate whom they want for office, recall a public official who repudiates his promises, go to taxation to prevent large corporations from escaping a just share of the burdens of government and regulate public service corporations so that the public can obtain good and efficient service for reasonable compensation.

"We propose to eliminate the judiciary from partisan politics and to make the legislative and executive branches of government responsible to and responsive to the people.

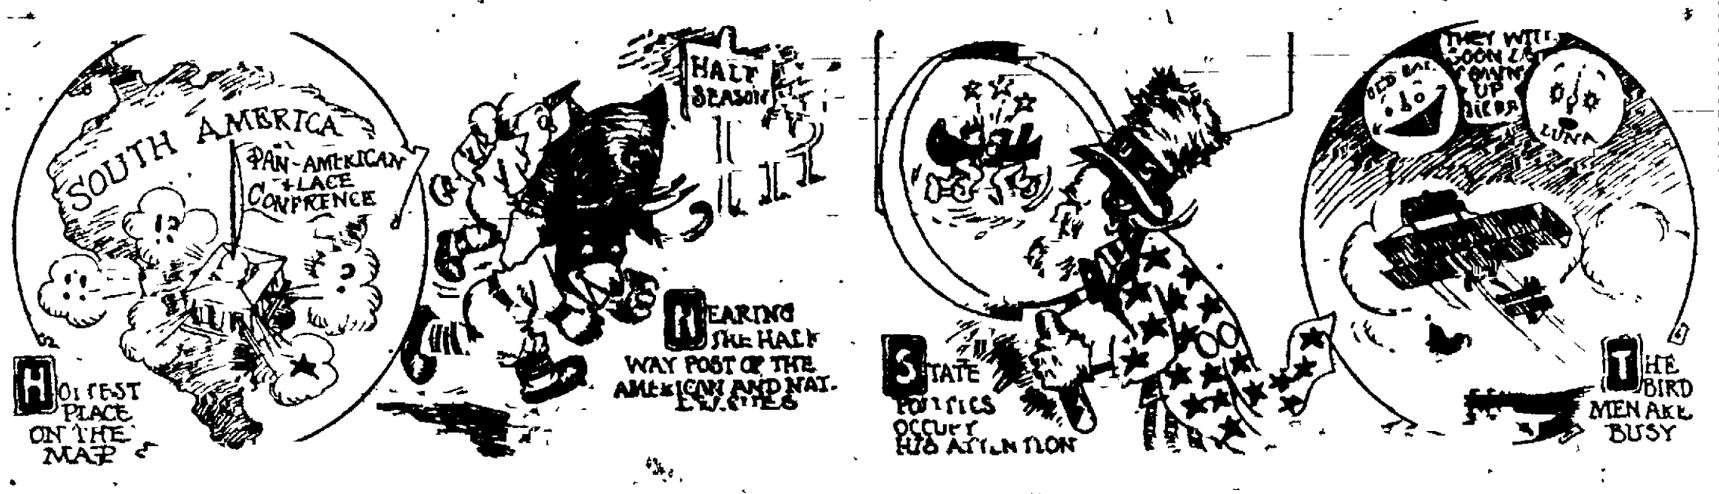

"We hold that a definitely expressed public opinion is the highest authority which a political party owes obedience, and this authority in Colorado demands that our party line up with the great Republican progressives in Washington, who, for seven months past, have constituted the only real representation of the people in Congress.

"It is a contest between commercial control of leadership. The first stands for privilege and progressive Republicans maintain that personal and property rights are each entitled to due protection but that the personal rights of man are of greater importance in maintaining stable Republicanism than the rights of property."

In the Republican legislature of 1909, Mr Vincent represented Delta county, and gained fame by being the only Republican member of the house to vote against Guggenheim for senator. He is about 35 years old and is considered one of the best speakers in the state.

THE PASSING SHOW.

COLORADO MINERS ORGANIZE CHAPTER

AFFILIATE WITH AMERICAN MINING CONGRESS.

Membership of Thousand Is Hoped For—Plan to Rejuvenate State's Leading Industry

DENVER, July 16 A Colorado chapter of the American Mining congress was launched tonight at an adjourned meeting of mining men from the different mining sections of the state. A constitution and by laws were adopted and a board of directors chosen. The board will meet at a date not yet decided upon and select officers for the new chapter and a date for its first formal gathering.

E Clark Wheeler of Aspen led a fight against a provision in the constitution requiring members of the new chapter to be members of the national body as well. He and his supporters wanted the constitution to allow mining men to join the chapter without necessarily affiliating with the national body. In this he was unsuccessful for the original provision was retained in the constitution.

The meeting adopted a resolution favoring the retention of Dr Joseph A. Holmes as director of the bureau of mines.

Practically the entire session was taken up with perfecting permanent organization, but it is expected that at the first meeting of the chapter proper which may be held soon, a systematic plan for rejuvenating the mining industry will be laid out.

There were about 150 prominent mining men representing all the important districts of the state in attendance at the meeting which was held in the convention hall of the Albany hotel. By the close of the meeting every one present had joined the new organization and it is hoped by the active campaign which is to be started at once to be able to bring the number up to 1,000.

The new organization will co-operate with the Denver chamber of commerce to look into the general causes for the retardation of the industry along many lines with a view to solving the problem and providing for better legislation with regard to mines and mining.

The primary reason for the organization is to secure more economic treatment of ores, to install modern methods of mining and milling.

DETECTIVE SHOOTS BOY

Repetition of Newark Tragedy Prevented at East Liverpool, O., by Prompt Action of Police

EAST LIVERPOOL, O., July 16—Albert Keddie, aged 21 years old, was shot by Detective Ira Rickett of the Antisaloon league force tonight. Keddie was standing on the sidewalk when Detective Rickett, it is alleged, attempted to shoot Calvin Dawson, 22 years old. Dawson escaped the fire, but Keddie was shot through the left ankle. Only a display of force by the police prevented the detective from being roughly handled. The trouble was started by an attack made by Dawson and a crowd of young men on Rickett.

REMARKABLE OPERATION AT SEA SAVES EUGENE P. SHOVE FROM CERTAIN DEATH

Special dispatch to The Gazette from Syracuse, N. Y., tells of a remarkable operation performed at sea on Eugene P Shove of this city, which saved him from what seemed certain death. Mr. Shove is a member of the local brokerage and mining firm of Shove, Aldrich & company, and is vice president of the El Paso National bank. He is one of the most prominent financial men in the state.

The dispatch, which was received last night, is as follows:

Special to The Gazette.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., July 16—Police Justice Shove, known as the "Ben" Lindsey of Syracuse for his interest in juvenile delinquents sat in his office at police headquarters his browned face wreathed in smiles, as with a firm grip he returned the greetings of old friends and associates who welcomed him home after nearly a three months' trip abroad.

When inquiry was made as to the health of his brother, Eugene P Shove of Colorado Springs, whose illness cut short his itinerary, his face suddenly became intensely serious. As rising to his feet, he related the story of a wonderful operation which saved his brother's life.

"We four—Eugene and his wife and myself and wife sailed one Thursday from New York. My brother had been ailing but at a consultation of physicians he was advised that it would be perfectly safe for him to sail. When

PINCHOT TO SUPPORT JOHNSON FOR GOVERNOR

Five Republicans Entered in Contest Under Direct Primary Law in California.

SACRAMENTO, Cal., July 16.—With five Republicans, one Democrat, one Prohibitionist and one Socialist in the race for nomination for governor, the entries for California's first election under the direct primary law will close at midnight tonight. Nominating petitions for all state offices, except the legislature, are virtually in.

The main interest centers in the fight for governor and since Theodore Bell, the Democratic aspirant, has no opposition at the primaries the real struggle is between the five Republicans. H Johnson indorsed by the Lincoln-Roosevelt league, and to be supported in the field by Gifford Pinchot, Philip Stanton, speaker of the assembly, Charles F. Curry, secretary of state, Alden Anderson, state superintendent of banks, and Nathan C. Ellery.

Johnson is the "insurgent" candidate. He came into particular prominence during the trial of Abe Ruef in San Francisco, when Francis J Heney the special prosecutor was shot down in the court room. Johnson volunteered to fill his place and secured the conviction of Ruef, who is now appealing from a 14-year sentence.

MAN AND WIFE JUMP FROM A MOVING CAR

Excitement When Couple Camping Near Manitou Make Exit From Crowded Coach.

Considerable excitement was caused among the passengers of a crowded car on the Manitou line eastbound, about 10 30 o'clock last night, when J E Curtis a tourist, stepped off backward while the car was going at a rapid rate and his wife screaming jumped off after him. Each carried a large bottle filled with mineral water, and the woman, in addition to several bruises, especially about the head was cut by the breaking glass. The man appeared unhurt, but was dazed. The couple were taken by friends to their camp about two miles west of Colorado City.

Little is known of the couple, although they are said to live in Missouri. They have been camping west of Colorado City for some time, and boarded the car at the Manitou Soda Springs, together with several score passengers returning to Colorado Springs from the band concert at the Soda Springs park.

The car was rounding a curve about half way between Manitou and Colorado City when the man rang the bell, signaling the conductor to stop the car. The car had barely begun to slacken speed when Curtis, who was seated next to his wife on the end seat of the coach an open one, stepped off backward. Mrs Curtis, screaming with fright, jumped off immediately afterward and the car was stopped as soon as possible.

No blame is attached to the conductor. Curtis and his wife are each about 40 years old.

NINE HURT IN COLLISION

Gasoline Motor Car Run Down by Regular Passenger Train at Big Bend, S. D.

RAPID CITY, S. D., July 16. Nine persons were injured, five possibly fatally, at Big Bend this afternoon, when a gasoline motor car running on the Rapid City and Big Bend railway tracks collided with a regular passenger train.

The following were seriously injured:

Mrs. R M. Fulweiler, Rapid City.
Mrs. Seiter, Cincinnati.
Mrs. Jeanette Seiter, Cincinnati.
Dick Mansfield, Rapid City.

A forest ranger, whose identity has not been learned.

It is said that the motorman of the car overlooked orders to remain on a siding until the passenger train had gone by.

ELKS REUNION CLOSED

DETROIT, July 16.—The forty-sixth annual reunion of Elks ended here today. The closing features were aviation contests and motor boat races. The aeroplane exhibition proved the leading attraction.

ROOSEVELT TO TAKE STUMP IN NEW YORK

TRYING TO BRING WARRING FACTIONS TOGETHER.

Deluged with Requests for Speeches Throughout Country Which He Is Obliged to Refuse

OYSTER BAY, N. Y., July 16.—That Colonel Theodore Roosevelt is to take an active part as a stump speaker in the fall campaign in this state was indicated by him tonight. The ex President said he would deliver a speech in October in Suffolk county. The speech will depend, the ex-President said, upon the developments within the two months. It is certain, that if the Roosevelt-Hughes program goes through in the state convention, and a platform satisfactory to the ex-President is adopted, he will make several other speeches.

Colonel Roosevelt has not yet satisfied himself of the ability to harmonize the warring factions in the Republican party in New York. Speaking of the state situation today he again expressed the hope that the party would become solidified before the campaign, so that a ticket and a platform entirely agreeable to the factions may be decided upon.

Colonel Roosevelt was deluged today with letters and telegrams from individuals and organizations who want him to make political or other speeches. The avalanche was brought upon him by the publication of the itineraries of his western and southern trips. He will be unable to depart from his schedule as announced, he said and would have to refuse the scores of urgent invitations.

Mr Roosevelt was called on today by a delegation of four colored southerners, who asked him if he would deliver a speech at the colored state fair at Richmond, Va in October telling of the condition of the negroes in Africa. Mr Roosevelt told them that he would try to get to Richmond, but did not know that he could arrange it.

Refuses to Discuss Third Term.

Theodore Roosevelt today refused to discuss the third term boom proposed to him in the Outlook office yesterday by former Ambassador David E Thompson.

The ex-president was pitching hay when he was asked as to his attitude toward the proposal. His reply was a point blank refusal to talk about the matter, the refusal being emphasized by a fierce scowl.

Mr Roosevelt has received scores of letters in the last 10 days, since he came out in support of the insurgent candidates, urging that he allow his friends to put him forward as a receptive candidate for the presidential nomination in 1912. He knows that if he discusses it a strong sentiment can be worked up within the Republican party, or at least the insurgent element of it. Mr Roosevelt, as far as known, has not given the slightest encouragement as yet to the importunities.

Colonel Roosevelt was busy all the afternoon chopping down trees. As he finished chopping three of the Roosevelt cows ambled placidly down the

JAPANESE ENCOUNTER STUBBORN RESISTANCE

Formosa Natives in Mountain Fastnesses Defy Subjugation Army and Die Fighting.

VICTORIA, B. C., July 16.—That the recent fighting between Japan and Formosa natives in the Giran district of Formosa was heavy and that the enemy was underrated is shown by details brought by the Empress of China today.

Japanese news states that on June 21 the Japanese forces succeeded in extricating the van of the subjugation army, which had been cut off and surrounded in Mount Bonkan. Captain Kawada, commanding the Japanese advance, was killed. Several other Japanese officers and over 100 of the rank and file were also killed. The fighting was at close quarters and most of the Formosans killed were slain with the bayonet. The engagements were fought in mountain districts.

Major General Chara has been sent with six thousand Japanese

CLOUDBURST CAUSES LOSS OF $2,000,000

Tobacco Crop Seriously Damaged in Three Kentucky Counties—Carlisle Inundated.

HENDERSON, Ky., July 16—Reports received today from Henderson, Union and Webster counties indicate that damage approximating $2,000,000 was done by a cloudburst last night. It is estimated that 50,000 acres of pooled tobacco in Henderson county alone have been destroyed and one tobacco plantation of 200 acres is a total loss.

All streams are out of bank and many bridges have been carried away. The tracks of the Illinois Central railroad near Highland Creek are under water for two miles. No lives are reported lost but hundreds of cattle, sheep and hogs were swept away.

Many fields with the entire crops of tobacco, corn and wheat were ruined. It has rained nearly every day for the last three weeks.

CARLISLE, Ky., July 16—Following closely on last night's torrential rain a cloudburst broke over Carlisle at noon today, flooding the greater part of the city and doing considerable damage to stores and warehouses. Eight blocks were inundated. Crops in the lowlands were washed away. This is the sixth cloudburst in Carlisle in three weeks.

MONORAIL PASSENGERS ARE BADLY SHAKEN UP

First Commercial Trip on New Service Near New York City Results Disastrously.

NEW YORK, July 16—Twenty persons were injured, only one seriously, in the first commercial trip this afternoon of the new monorail service between City Island and Bartow, in the suburbs of the Bronx. Howard Tunis, the inventor, who was motorman, suffered a broken rib, and one passenger a broken leg. The latter was the only one of the injured to go to a hospital.

Although described as a monorail, the only car the company owns did not depend for its stability on a gyroscope. For support and traction it ran on a single rail but twin guide rails overhead hung between pillars and braces on either side of the right of way held it in balance.

While the car was running 30 miles an hour one of these guide rails worked loose and the car tilted 40 degrees, piling the frightened passengers in the lower angle. The pillars at either side of the car prevented it from toppling entirely.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE ON NEW YORK WATER FRONT

NEW YORK, July 16—Fire which for a time threatened to rival in destructiveness the big Hoboken pier conflagration of several years ago raged on the Hudson river front of Manhattan this afternoon, completely destroying pier 14, the main pier of the Metropolitan Steamship company, badly damaging the steamer Henry F Dimock of that line, and half a dozen lighters and small craft moored near by. The loss is estimated at $600,000.

LEAGUE BEHIND GOVERNOR

Takes Steps to Assure by Passage by Legislature of Initiative and Referendum Laws.

DENVER, July 16.—Organization has been extended into every county of the state by the Direct Legislation league with the object of aiding the extra session of the legislature in the passage of initiative and referendum laws, and as soon as the assembly meets leaders of the league will take their places at the capitol, that is to stay until their plans have been accomplished.

Letters are being sent now to all members of the legislature, and by the time the session starts every legislator will know just what is desired by the league. Special agents of the league also are visiting the legislators at their homes now and doing all in their power to acquaint the lawmakers with what is wanted.

Aside from working for the initiative and referendum, the league will take but little active part in the workings of the extra session, but many of the members will use personal influence to have the "headless ballot" bill passed too.

TRAINMEN HESITATE TO GO ON STRIKE

REOPEN NEGOTIATIONS WITH PENNSYLVANIA COMPANY.

Another Conference Arranged for Monday—Railroad Preparing to Fill Strikers' Places.

PHILADELPHIA, July 16.—After a two days suspension of negotiations by the contending parties during which threats of strike have come from one side and extensive strike preparations have been made on the other an announcement was made today that representatives of conductors and trainmen will meet General Manager Myers of the Pennsylvania road Monday at 11 o'clock. An explanation of the reopening of negotiations was given by President W. G Lee of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.

"A telephone message was received last night," he said, "from one whom I am not at liberty to name but who has no official connection with either side of the controversy—you may call him merely a private citizen. He said he was convinced there had been a misunderstanding which might be cleared by another conference.

"I was still wondering how there could possibly have been a misunderstanding when Mr. Shepherd vice president of the conductors union, and Mr. Sines vice president of the trainmen's brotherhood, arrived this morning from Pittsburg and said that the company had offered the western men substantially the conditions that we were fighting for. Therefore we asked Mr. Meyers for another conference and he set the hour for 11 o'clock Monday."

Though the situation has taken on a more hopeful aspect the company is making extensive preparations for a possible strike. In the vast West Philadelphia yards care are being fitted up as temporary quarters for the men who will be recruited in the event of a strike from the company's many shops. The special police force of 1,000 men on the lines between here and Pittsburg will be increased to 3,000 and if necessary to 5,000. The sheriffs of nearly all the counties in the state through which the company's lines extend have been notified of the situation and warned to be prepared.

When President Garretson of the Order of Railway Conductors was informed of these preparations, he expressed no surprise.

"I think the company would show a woeful lack of foresight if it did not," was his only comment.

WILL RACE TO SOUTH POLE

Commander of Japanese Expedition Fixes Exact Date of Expected Arrival at That Point.

VICTORIA, B. C., July 16—To race with the British expedition under Captain Scott to the South pole, a Japanese sailing vessel of 200 tons, carrying Lieutenant Shiras and the Japanese expedition to the Antarctic, will leave Tokio bay August 1. Chinaponies have been secured in Mukden and are on the way to Tokio for the expedition. The expedition will proceed via Bonin islands and Australia, and in an announcement issued to the Japanese press, Lieutenant Shiras says:

"We will leave McMurdo bay in November and reach the South pole January 28, returning after a stay of three days at the pole."

CANNON IS OVERCOME BY THE HEAT WHEN MAKING SPEECH

CONDITION NOT SERIOUS

Disregarding Advice of Physicians He Resumes Tour and Delivers Another Address.

WINFIELD, Kan., July 16—Joseph G. Cannon, speaker of the national house of representatives, collapsed here this afternoon on the Chautauqua platform after speaking for an hour and forty minutes. Prompt aid prevented him from fainting but he was unable to finish his speech and begged the audience to excuse him, stating that the greatest difficulty. A temperature of 110 prevailed here today. The heat affected the speaker and brought on the sudden dizziness. Water and fresh air partly revived him and he, halting, thanked the audience for listening to him for so great a length of time. He was led away by friends and taken to the home of J. T. Rafferty, where he was cared for. His secretary declared shortly afterwards that the attack was not serious and that the speaker was planning for an automobile ride late in the evening.

During the latter part of his speech Speaker Cannon was noticeably affected by the heat. He became weak. He backed up against a table on the platform and, half seated, he continued to talk. His face assumed an unnatural white pallor. He reached back and took the ice from a pitcher and placed it on his head. His head drooped to his chest.

"I can not talk longer," he almost gasped, "there are many more things I should like to have said but I can not. I am overcome with the heat."

Friends rushed forward with a chair and an electric fan was turned on him. Water and ice were procured and the platform was cleared of the curious. The audience remained intensely quiet. Finally Uncle Joe" arose with a friend on either side and said:

I am sorry I can't continue, but I have been through three years of hard work and worry and this intense heat has been more than I can stand. I thank you."

Advised to Abandon Tour.

Accompanied by Congressman Philip Campbell and declaring he was "not a bit sick," Speaker Cannon left here tonight for Arkansas City, where Campbell was scheduled to speak tonight. The speaker had recovered from his collapse and insisted upon making the trip.

At Arkansas City, Speaker Cannon briefly addressed a great audience in the open air this evening. He gave his attention briefly to Senator Bristow and the "insurgents" in Congress. He denounced their policy and said Senator Bristow was seeking notoriety. Somewhat in the way of a reply to an address made by Senator Bristow a week ago, Speaker Cannon disputed the statements made by the senator emphatically.

Speaker Cannon's physicians and friends urged him tonight to abandon his Kansas speaking tour. The speaker, however, seems determined to continue it and to inquirers he said he would say definitely tomorrow. Mr Cannon feels that he is strong enough to continue his tour, and that today's collapse was due only to the excessively warm weather, which he was not used to.

Speaker Cannon appeared tired when he reached Winfield today. His all-night ride from Kansas City and the excitement incident to his debate with Gifford Pinchot before the Knife and Fork club at Kansas City last night, together with the hot weather here, seemed to unnerve him. It was noticed he did not walk with his old-time firm step as he advanced to his audience.

Audience Unfriendly.

The speaker seemed to realize he was in "the enemy's country." While the audience of 4,000 persons was not hostile, it certainly was not friendly.

NEW ALLOY DISCOVERED WHICH MAY REVOLUTIONIZE MANUFACTURE OF CUTLERY

SAN FRANCISCO, July 16—The American Chemical society, in session here, was jolted clear out of the rut of technical discussion of profound and atheistic matters of chemistry today by the announcement of Ellwood Haynes of Kokomo, Ind., that he had discovered a new alloy, which will work great changes in the industrial world. By means of this alloy, which was presented to the world for the first time today, manufacturers, it is said, can make make cutlery without the use of iron or steel.

Haynes is an automobile manufacturer, but 15 years ago was a chemist, and now counts that his hobby. In his Kokomo laboratory he has been making experiments a long time.

The alloy is known as ... It retains its luster under all atmospheric conditions. In cutlery the metal will take an edge comparable to good steel, and is in many ways superior to steel, so that it is likely to supersede the latter. The alloy takes a hard polish very pleasing in appearance.

Pocket knives have already been made of it, and with remarkable success. One bar was forged into a good razor, which has been used thousands of times. Fruit knives made of it will not tarnish from contact with the juicy fruit.

Its cost is slightly greater than that of steel, but in its practical utility it has a big advantage. No ... will gather on it under any conditions. No metal is equal to it, says Haynes, except gold and platinum.

BATH HOUSES OF JAPAN.

George Ade Tells About What They Are and What They Are Not.

From the Pittsburg Dispatch.

HOT SPRINGS. George Ade, international humorist, playwright, fancy stock breeder, globe trotter, past grand master of slang and what not, is at Hot Springs enjoying himself, and contrasting methods of baths and bathing with those which he enjoyed while in Japan

"In some parts of the world the police come around and ask you how often you take a bath, and of course that makes you mad and you lie to him and go about without taking any just out of [illegible]. I suppose it would be the same way down here if the authorities asked such fool questions, but of course they don't, and therefore everybody spends a lot of time in the bath houses. Speaking of bath houses reminds me of Japan.

"They have hot springs over there, too, and when I say that I have seen a good deal of the bathers of Japan, and that they have seen a good deal of me also, I am not speaking figuratively. I am dealing in plain, naked facts. The bath houses over there are not much like the ones down here They are merely places where one can get wet. They sink a tub of water in the ground and you get in it and splash around until you have made a big noise and then get out and roll around on a mat until you think you are dry. In their eyes a bather is not judged by the thoroughness of his bath, but by the noise he makes when taking it. Well, I guess that is the general state of affairs the world over, though, come to think about it. It is the fellow that makes the big splash that gets the credit. There was a man over there once who gained a great reputation as a bather, for every time he went into the water he made a noise like a spouting whale. Then one day the bath house stage carpenter rung up the drop curtain on him and there he was sitting at the edge of the tub, full dressed, and pounding on the water with a paddle.

A Spasm of Reform.

"In former days over there both sexes bathed together promiscuously Then a Jap legislator was seized by a reform spasm and had a law passed providing that each bath must be covered by a screen sheet. But he forgot to specify how it should be covered, and so the bath house proprietors got the sheets and hung them horizontally over the baths like a roof. Then the legislator came back at them again with another bill which provided that the sheet should be hung perpendicularly between the baths. But he forgot to specify the size of the sheet. It was like the ordinance that said each dog should be provided with a muzzle during dog days. There was a man who had a great dane's muzzle and only a Mexican hairless pup to fit it onto, so he put the dog inside of the muzzle and the law was vindicated. I will show you that sheet that they hung up in front of my bath to screen me." Ade rummaged in his bureau drawer. "I can't find it. I must have used it for a handkerchief by mistake and sent it to the laundry."

WOMAN BOUNCES CHEEKY HOBO

From the Pittsburg Dispatch.

Mrs. Rebecca Silver Wise, 75 years old, who resides on the first floor of an apartment house at 170 West 176th street, last night answered a rap at her door and was met by a man weighing more than 300 pounds who was soliciting contributions for a fund which he said he was collecting for widows and orphans. Mrs. Wise said she had no money to spare. "Well, madam," the visitor asked, "would you be kind enough to permit me to take a bath here?" Mrs. Wise again denied his request. Then the man tried to force his way into the bathroom. Mrs. Wise, who is a small woman, caught the intruder by his arms and forced him out of the house, following the door assistant him.

REMARKABLE OPERATION

we had been out two days, a stiff northwester struck us and the storm and damp weather soon developed an alarming case of mastoiditis, which, you know, is always very dangerous, and is fatal in so large number of cases.

"Eugene became rapidly worse, and you can imagine the terrible strain which I was under, realizing how slim were my brother's chances for recovery. Often I would have to hold him with main strength as he writhed in an agony of pain.

"In the light of subsequent events, even had I no belief in Providence, I believe that I could not have failed to see the finger of the Almighty directing the drama. I found at this juncture that we had on board a famous surgeon, Dr. Herman Stolte of Milwaukee. About six years ago he came to America from London, where he had been an associate of the king's personal physician, Dr. Seymour. He had performed more than 700 successful operations for mastoiditis in Germany, England and America, and in China at the time of the Boxer rebellion. His father, a man about 90 years, whom he was going to visit, is court physician at Potsdam.

"The following Wednesday, Dr. Stolte came to me and declared that unless an operation was performed while we were at sea, my brother could not live. His wife was in immediate danger from the shock, as she had heart trouble. The doctor had not brought with him any instruments, as he was on a pleasure trip, and the ship had no regular hospital. But the doctor worked from 8 o'clock that morning until after midnight fitting up as best he could, a place called the ambulatory, into an emergency hospital. By this time my brother had become delirious, and was almost mad with the pain, and [illegible] and complicated the case. We were despairing as the doctor rushed from the hospital to my brother's side all day long, attempting to relieve the patient's suffering. After midnight, the physician came to our cabin and bade us hope. The hospital was ready and he needed only our prayers that the morrow bring a smooth sea, which was so essential to the success of the operation.

Crude Instruments.

"He had a mallet and chisel, used in such operations, and which were made at the ship's forge, and he sharpened his jackknife to a keen edge. Had he been other than a German I doubt that with all his skill, he could have saved my brother, as he needed assistants, and all the crew were German-speaking, the boat being the Cincinnati of the Hamburg-American line. They could have rendered an English-speaking surgeon but little service. Dr. Stolte canvassed the ship and found that among them were four men who had been orderlies in the hospital corps of the Germany army. He enlisted them for the operation. Does all this look like Providence?

"The eventful day opened with a smooth sea and a following wind, which made for a steady boat. There was no ether on board, and the chloroform, which was administered by the ship's physician, had to be used in such quantity that the fumes nearly overcame the operating physician. Dr. Stolte, as for two hours he plied his skill with his crude instruments. Only sheer grit and the realization of his responsibility kept him up.

"Lacking a retractor, which is almost an essential instrument for the operation, and which is used to keep the soft parts back so as to be able to use the chisel, two of those orderlies each took hold of the skull, and for two long hours, they maintained that position. The surgeon said afterward that they did not vary their position the thousand part of an inch, and that when he took their hands in his there was not the slightest tremor perceptible. He seemed to regard this as more wonderful than his own work. Dr. Stolte remarked that in his 700 operations for the same malady, he never saw so aggravated a case.

"A few days after the operation, the organs of the body refused to perform their functions, and the case again assumed a fatal aspect. My brother was landed in England in a dying state. Forgetful of himself or his own health, this renowned physician battled for three nights and three days. It was a heroic sight to see him, no sooner than one medium lost its efficacy turn undaunted to another.

"He saved Eugene again, and after four weeks in a nursing home, as the English call the private hospitals, we were able to resume our journey by easy stages.

"Richard Lake, a famous London ear surgeon—you never address a physician as 'doctor' in England—became interested in the case. He remarked that it was the cleanest incision that he had ever seen.

"'Do you wish to see the operating instrument?' asked Dr. Stolte. 'Here it is,' he said, pulling his jackknife out of his pocket.

"'How is Eugene now?' Well, he is in Badenheim, and is as brown as a berry—the picture of health. When I sat beside him as Dr. Stolte was testing his hearing by whispering at a distance, though the doctor spoke his broken German, would you believe me—he actually could hear the doctor better than I."

"Thankful?" repeated Justice Shove, as, finishing his story, which he seemed to have lived over again, he drew a long breath; 'why, I feel that I could fairly shout to heaven the praises of the skill and unselfish devotion to his profession, of that Dr. Stolte."

FUND PASSES $1,500 MARK

$134.50 Added to Contribution to Raise Mortgage on Boys Club.

Subscriptions to the fund for raising the mortgage from the Boys club have now passed the $1,500 mark, and were augmented yesterday by $50 from Mrs. J. M. Bemis, $25 from Frank F. Castello, $25 from W. F. Richards, $5 from a friend, and $29.50 from small collections.

This showing is considered most encouraging by those who are leading the campaign for the fund, and they feel that within a short time the remaining $1,000 will be secured.

OHIO REPUBLICANS WILL INDORSE TAFT

President Assured That Republicans of His Home State Will Furnish Keynote to Campaign.

BEVERLY, July 16.—President Taft was told today that the Ohio Republican state platform to be adopted at the Columbus convention, July 26-28, would contain a ringing indorsement of the entire Taft administration and the Payne-Aldrich tariff law, and, in connection with the speech to be delivered by Representative Nicholas Longworth as temporary chairman, will serve as an index to the campaign to be waged throughout the country by the Republicans this fall.

A strong denial of the charge that the tariff and the Republican party are responsible for the high cost of living, and a proclamation that the Republican Congress elected two years ago has fulfilled the party pledges, are included in the scheme of campaign issues to be framed.

These facts were developed here today as a result of calls upon the President by Senator Dick of Ohio and Wade H. Ellis, chairman of the Ohio Republican state executive committee.

As to James R. Garfield, secretary of the interior in the Roosevelt cabinet, and now closely associated with Gifford Pinchot in his political activity, both Senator Dick and Chairman Ellis declared tonight that he most certainly would not be the nominee for governor.

It became known today that other Ohio leaders are hurrying to Beverly. Senator Burton, who is to be permanent chairman of the convention at Columbus, will be here for a conference tomorrow. Carmi Thompson, the secretary of state, and one of the avowed candidates for the gubernatorial nomination, and Walter Brown of Toledo also are expected.

President Taft had an extended conference today with W. H. Holabird of Los Angeles, representing the California Development company, and Captain Allan Kelly of southern California, regarding the situation in the Imperial valley of California and the proper steps to be taken to restore the Colorado river to its original bed. Congress recently placed $1,000,000 at the disposal of the President to be used in protecting the valley if an investigation shall warrant the expenditure of the money. The President has selected J. A. Ockerson of St. Louis, an engineer of the Mississippi river commission, to go to California at once and study the situation.

LOCAL GIRL MARRIES

Miss Blanche Peabody Weds W. C. Nelson, a Chicago Attorney, in That City.

According to a telegram received by friends of the young couple in this city last night, Miss Blanche Peabody of 819 Sierra Madre street became the bride of W. C. Nelson, a prominent lawyer of Chicago, in the parlors of the La Salle hotel of that city at 6 o'clock last night. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Edgar H. Libbey of Chicago. The bride is well known in this city and has resided here for several years.

PICNIC A BIG SUCCESS

Large Number of People Attend St. Francis Hospital Benefit at Zoo Park.

Despite the threatening clouds a large number of people availed themselves yesterday of the opportunity offered to visit the popular Zoo park and at the same time add to the fund of the St. Francis Aid society, which is to make several needed improvements at the hospital, and was yesterday giving a picnic at the park to secure funds for that purpose. Manager Coughlin had kindly agreed to turn over all gate receipts to the society, and in view of the large crowd present, the receipts must have netted a considerable sum.

Certainly nothing was lacking that could have added to the pleasure of the guests at the park. None of the many attractions was slighted, and those present including many young people and children, appeared to enjoy the picnic thoroughly. Many small parties took luncheon to the park and spent the entire day among the trees. On the whole the affair was so successful that in all probability it will be repeated each year, and will doubtless be looked forward to by the many friends of the hospital.

DR. WOLF EXONERATED

Not guilty of the charge of murder was the verdict returned at 2:15 o'clock yesterday afternoon by the jury in the case of Dr. W. C. Wolf, accused of being responsible for the death on June 5 of Mrs. Bertha May Thornton. Within five minutes the Colorado City physician walked from the court house, a free man. Jesse Thornton, husband of the dead woman, and the principal witness for the prosecution, who has been in the county jail since the inquest on June 8, was also liberated yesterday afternoon on recommendation of the district attorney's office and no charge will be preferred against him.

The case was given to the jury at 4 o'clock Friday afternoon, and when the court opened at 10 o'clock yesterday morning the report from the jury room was that no agreement had been reached. As the hours of the day wore away, the suspense on Dr. Wolf became noticeable, and he was perceptibly nervous when the jury finally announced that an agreement had been reached, and filed into the jury box. The verdict was read by the foreman Dr. G. W. Field, and when the words announcing his acquittal were read, Dr. Wolf was visibly affected. In the first sense of relief that swept over him, he was scarcely able to respond to the congratulations of his wife and a number of friends who had stood by him in the trial.

NEW HEALTH BATHS WILL BE OPEN TODAY

Carlsbad Expert Has Engaged Commodious Quarters at the Antlers Hotel.

Announcement was made yesterday that the formal opening of the Antlers hotel health baths department, a new feature for local hotels, and the only bath establishment of its kind in the United States, will take place this afternoon at 2 o'clock. With experienced operators, latest apparatus and spacious quarters on the fifth floor of the hotel, the new business should prove very popular. Prof. A. F. Sureddin of Carlsbad, Austria, authority on health baths, is the superintendent.

A feature of the establishment is the fact that the wonderfully pure, soft water of Colorado Springs makes it possible to reproduce the correct chemical composition of the original baths to suit each individual complaint or condition. The new establishment is styled the most modern health baths department in the United States. It is equipped to give more than 250 different baths and other procedures, based upon physiological principles.

The prices for these various treatments are extremely low, and especial care and attention will be given by experts, attendants, nurses and masseurs of both sexes, in strict accordance with professional ethics, and under the watchful eye of Prof. Sureddin. It is also emphasized that the same attention will be given to the person of moderate means as to the millionaire, so that none needs feel any hesitancy in visiting the department. Among the procedures used are: Tub baths, douches, cabinets, packs, shampoos, rubs, compresses, irrigations, massage and electricity.

A course of treatment under one or the other of these methods is said to be exceedingly healthful. Following the formal opening this afternoon, the department will begin tomorrow to give any kind of simple, medicated or perfumed French bath. The quarters of the department are in five large rooms, including rest and cooling rooms, quarters for all night accommodations, etc.

FORM A SOCIETY TO AID ORPHAN CHILDREN

Waifs Will Be Cared for in a Home at 1610 South Tejon by Private Subscriptions.

The Children's Aid society of Colorado has been started in this city and will work for the betterment of the conditions of orphan children throughout the state by aiding other like societies and trying to keep as many youngsters as possible from entrance to the State Home for Dependent Children. The society has secured the house at 1610 South Tejon street, which will be used as headquarters and the business of the organization will be entered into at once.

The society is to be conducted upon the same lines as kindred societies in the eastern states and will not conflict with the work of the state authorities but will try to help them by doing something which will lighten their responsibilities and at the same time be of greater help to the children. Children will be cared for without reference to their station in life or their color.

The money to carry on the plan will be secured by private subscriptions until the state or county can be induced to aid and many prominent citizens have already complied with the request for money.

The officers of the society are: C. C. Hemming, president; Asa T. Jones, vice president; Mrs. W. H. R. Stote, secretary; W. R. Armstrong, treasurer; the Rev. A. Clark Selby, general secretary; F. M. McMahon, auditor. The various boards of control follow:

TWO DRUG STORE MEN HELD FOR STATE PHARMACY BOARD

Edward Meislahn, proprietor of the South End pharmacy, and H. H. Robbins, proprietor of the Huerfano drug store, were arraigned in the court of Justice Toombs yesterday on charges of having compounded prescriptions without having passed the examination prescribed by the state board of pharmacy. The complaints were sworn to by S. B. Bresler, secretary of the board, who alleges that neither of the drug store proprietors has a registered pharmacist in the stores in question. The men were released on their own recognizance and their trial set for next Tuesday, July 19. Mr. Bresler is making an investigation into the drug stores of this city and any drug store proprietor not having a registered pharmacist in his employ is liable to arrest. James Augh, Student in Local High School, Says Korea Is Unfairly Treated.

James Augh, a Korean student at the local High School, is working in connection with the Korean National association of this country in the hope of doing something to aid in keeping Japan from annexing his country. According to Augh the Japanese troops who were stationed in the country when the Korean army was disbanded, have taken the government into their own hands and Korea will be the property of Japan in a short time if something is not done. News received in this country is sent through the Japanese people he says and for that reason Americans have no idea of the true state of affairs.

LAWTON GIVES HIS SIDE OF QUESTION

SAYS CITY OFFICIALS HAVE BEEN INVESTIGATING.

Considering Use of Oil and "Oil-Sand" to Lay Dust in the Town.

"If the citizens of Colorado Springs will have a little patience they will probably get what they want in the way of paving for the downtown streets, and dust proof thoroughfares elsewhere," said Commissioner Lawton yesterday. "We have been steadily getting information so that we will know where we are without spending money foolishly and are now about ready to make some experiments.

"We have boiled down the question until now we have two definite plans in view as regards the laying of the dust outside the paving district. We have secured from a representative of the Standard Oil company a promise to do what he can to secure for the city a car of oil free of cost with which to experiment, and to furnish the necessary apparatus to lay it on the streets. This representative has been negotiating with us for some time.

"Another scheme which we have been investigating, and which may be adopted, is to use what is known as "oil-sand" from quarries near Morrison, Colo., and which is now being experimented with in Denver. This product has body enough to make a good crown for the highway and is said to have sufficient oil in its composition to insure the laying of the dust as effectively as oil sprinkling. We have figured on the cost of this product, and will probably conclude arrangements for the laying of about a block for experimental purposes. Although these matters appear simple to the outsider they have entailed a vast amount of work and almost every dust laying system used in the country has been investigated. As this city has never had a foot of what may be called modern streets either in the paved or dust proof line, it was up to us to start at the beginning and to obtain all information at first hand.

"The whole question reverts to the cost of the improvement and there we are up against it. Our appropriations this year are not sufficient to do much outside of the regular work of the department and the question of securing first-class streets is one of time and money. There is not the least doubt that the time has arrived to do permanent work on the streets, and the property owners must be prepared to pay for it.

Much Work Done.

So far this year we have done an enormous amount of work that was badly needed, but which has escaped general notice because it was not in the center of the city and was not advertised. On the west side Colorado avenue, Washington avenue, Grant avenue and Fourteenth and Fifteenth streets, have received much attention and are in splendid shape so far as it is possible to put that class of street into shape. In the western part of the city north of Pikes Peak avenue there has been a great deal of work done, and many alleys that were nothing but bogholes have been graded and made presentable. In the north end we have also performed much work on several cross streets and on the east side we have graded considerably on Bijou, Boulder and other streets. Besides this we had to finish the work on three or four conduits over Shooks Run—work that we inherited from our predecessors—and thousands of loads of dirt have been hauled from the streets all over town, notwithstanding the published statements that all the dirt is left to blow away. In addition we have had to reflor three or four bridges either partially or entirely, and to make extensive repairs on several other bridges to keep them safe for traffic. We built 39 new concrete ditch boxes in June alone, cleaned it and put in 90 new wooden boxes.

"When we came into office there was not a record to be found of the work done by previous administrations, and we had to install a system of bookkeeping and a system of checking all property belonging to the city. We found old accounts unsettled and not recorded—for instance one bill for $500 against the street railway company of two years standing, of which there was not the scratch of a pen to indicate its origin. We came across it accidentally among a pile of rubbish and had it not been for that the city would have lost it entirely so far as any record of it was concerned. To get order out of such chaos has required time and labor. We have now a system of checking up every article owned by the city and the taking of an inventory has required time and work. Under the old system, property would disappear, as for instance an automatic grader of which we have been able to find no trace. It is simply a question of getting order and organization out of confusion. Before I consented to run for the office I told I warned my friends that the citizens would expect a revolution under their new charter in six months but any reasonable man knows that this is impossible and anyone who will take the trouble to examine our monthly reports will come to the conclusion that the department is giving good returns for the money it spends.

TRAIN OVER MILE LONG

Wonderful Traveling Home of Barnum and Bailey Circus

When the Barnum and Bailey Greatest Show on Earth is packed away for the night and speeding over the rails to its next point of exhibition it lives in a rolling home over a mile in length. This wonderful train is divided in five sections. It is a congress of nations on wheels, a Noah's Ark of animals and a world's fair of a thousand charms.

When the show lies spread out for a day's business it covers 14 acres of ground. Over it waves a sea of canvas spotted with 10,000 flags and banners. No other show can compare with it in size, wealth or variety. The spirit of P. T. Barnum the greatest showman who ever lived still animates its faultless policy. The wonderful system of James A. Bailey that has made the handling of the gigantic proposition possible is still in evidence urging it on from year to year to better and grander achievements.

Less than a mile of parade the best parade America has ever seen. This circus has spent many of its 55 years in touring Asia and Europe. This has kept it in constant touch with the lands from whence come all wonders. Material for this years street spectacle were gathered in this way. Agents have searched savage lands, artists and designers have worked for months in the foreign workshops of the show, experts have ransacked the art galleries of France and Italy and the looms of China and Japan have been busy since early last fall making the silks and satins to clothe the people of the pageant. It has taken two years to turn out the equipment, and the management has spent $1,000,000 on it.

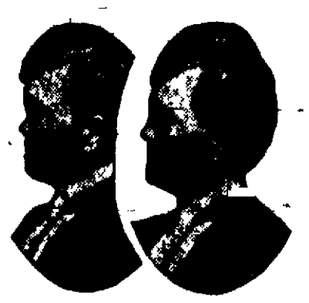

All strange types of the human family are found in the three mile procession together with their characteristic costumes, weapons, war vehicles, their music and their idols. Rich and fantastic carriages of state, gorgeous tableau floats, fairy chariots bearing the myths of childlore, richly draped howdahs, engines of warfare, pagan images, barbarian orchestras, tomtom players, weird pipers, silver chimes, cathedral organs, siren pipes, chanters, dervishes, castanet ballets, kirmiss scenes, fete day pictures, mardigras pageantry and a thousand other spectacular sights unfold themselves before the eyes of spectators for an hour or more.

The show carries its own dynamo plant which power is generated for the various shops and for 5,000 incandescent lamps, flaring arcs and a battery of spotlights. There is also a circus postoffice where mail is received daily from all parts of the country in the world. The circus grounds are a city in themselves with doctors, lawyers, barbers, detectives, and artisans of every description. In the canvas hotel 4,000 meals are cooked and eaten every day in the week. A corps of seventy chefs, cooks, waiters and kitchen helpers is carried, and 1,000 people can sit at the tables at one time.

The foremost features under the main tent are Desperado, who leaps from the dome of the arena and lands upon his bare chest on the ground, Jupiter a white horse that rides in a balloon and shoots off fireworks, Charlie the First a chimpanzee, who is the best bicycle rider and acrobat in the world, the Konyot family of riders, the Siegrist-Silbon family of aerialists, the Dollar acrobats, the Florenze troupe of acrobats, the Bazac horse circus, the La Fallie quartette of the world's strongest men. The circus comes to Colorado Springs on Tuesday, August 2.

START AGITATION FOR A CITY PARK

CITIZENS BELIEVE SOME ACTION NECESSARY.

Question May Be Brought Up at Spring Election Site in Center of City Available.

The question as to whether Colorado City shall have a central park will, in all probability, come before the residents at the election next spring, should the present agitation among many of the citizens result in anything more than mere talk. It is pointed out by those who favor the proposition that the present site of the Bancroft school could be purchased by the city, the buildings removed, and the space which is practically the only available ground within a reasonable distance of the center of the town converted into a park by the expenditure of not more than $50,000. It is understood in fact that the property was offered to the municipality only recently for the sum of $40,000. While the expenditure of this amount would undoubtedly be looked upon at first sight as an extravagance, the promoters of the proposition say that the fact of the city's having no debt at the present time should be borne in mind.

Almost any hot afternoon this summer the need for such a park is brought to the attention of even the most casual passerby. The sidewalks are lined with those who wish a cool place in the open in which to rest while the few small bits of lawn near the Bancroft school usually harbor as many small boys as can be crowded into the space. All of these people would welcome a park were one available and not only these but many mothers with young children would welcome a park where they might go on hot afternoons and enjoy the shade and coolness.

Those who are anxious for the betterment of the city in every way point out that such a park would be far more desirable as a loitering place for young men and boys than their present haunts in the neighborhood of the shooting galleries and saloons.

Any action with reference to the bonding of the city with such a park in view will, of course have to come from the city council, and the bonds will have to be voted for at a regular city election.

CANNON IS OVERCOME

Almost from the beginning he abandoned his manuscript and spoke on the development of constitutional government. After an hour and three-quarters, he took up the Payne tariff bill. He had spoken but a few words laudatory of it when he grew pale.

It had been reported that Mr. Cannon's Winfield speech would be an answer to one made here by United States Senator Joseph L. Bristow a week ago, but it did not prove to be such. Senator Bristow made sensational charges concerning the rubber schedules of the tariff bill. Speaker Cannon dismissed the tariff schedules in these words:

Mr. Cannon's reference to the tariff dealt mainly with the question of taking the tariff out of politics.

Tariff in Politics.

"Some advise taking the tariff out of politics," he explained, "but I have noticed that this advice usually comes from those who are opposed to the protective tariff under which this country has had its greatest development. We have several times thought we had the tariff out of politics by the demonstration of the success and the necessity for the protective tariff principle."

He said adherents of the protective tariff principle thought it had been firmly established when used to pay off the debts of the Civil war, but that the opponents of the principle, unwilling to have it so, had insisted upon meeting every four years in national convention and declaring that tariff for protection was unconstitutional. He said that President McKinley also thought the question was settled when the country seemed so prosperous under the Dingley law, but that the Democratic party took their old position of opposition.

Conservation was also touched upon by the speaker. He said that in the last 20 years the government had withdrawn 200,000,000 acres for forest reserves.

He then went over the work of the last session of Congress, declaring that the postal savings bank bill was the one important piece of legislation enacted considered under a special rule.

When about two-thirds of his speech was delivered, Mr. Cannon, overcome by the heat, was forced to abandon the effort.

"Do you ever milk the cows?" someone asked.

"No, I can't milk cows," the colonel admitted. "The last time I tried was many years ago on a ranch in North Dakota, where we had only condensed milk morning and night. I chased a cow over two miles over everything we came to. I roped her, threw her down and turned her over. The result was not as I expected. I got precious little milk."

The colonel said today that his speech in Denver would be on conservation.

Denver Day Arrangements.

DENVER, July 16.—Gifford Pinchot, former chief forester, facetiously referred to as the advance agent for Roosevelt, spent two hours in Denver late this afternoon, in which time he met and conferred with Secretary Painter of the Colorado Live Stock association. Plans for the reception and entertainment of Colonel Roosevelt when he visits Denver August 26, were approved by Mr. Pinchot. A committee will meet the colonel somewhere between Denver and Greeley. At the Union station here Governor Shafroth, Mayor Speer and other officials will greet the colonel. Spanish war veterans, the Colorado Live Stock association, whose particular guest the colonel will be, and other civic bodies will march in a parade.

In the afternoon Colonel Roosevelt will deliver his principal address at the auditorium. This meeting will be under control of an organized body, but will be a mass meeting of the people. Mr. Pinchot made it plain today that this must be the plan.

At night a banquet will be tendered the colonel by the Live Stock association.

KIDNAPING FRUSTRATED

Two Unknown Men Foiled in Attempt to Carry Off 14-Year-Old Girl in Denver.

DENVER, July 16.—When Helen Chase, the 14-year-old daughter of Henry M. Chase, a real estate man, went into the back yard at her home about dark last night to take in some clothes, she was seized by a tall, masked man who placed his hand tightly over her mouth and carried her to the back fence, where he handed her over to a confederate, also masked.

With hands still stopping her screams, the men carried her 100 yards from the house, when one of them stumbled and let the girl fall. She screamed as she fell. Her father, her mother and her cousin, Percy Chase, heard the cry and dashed to her assistance. When they got to where she lay the men were gone, having driven away in a buggy.

The unsuccessful attempt at kidnaping is thought to be the culmination of a well-laid plot. The two kidnapers have been seen in the neighborhood for two months, but all attempts to catch them have failed.

CRIPPEN SEARCH WITHOUT RESULT

STEAMERS SEARCHED IN ALL PARTS OF WORLD.

London Police Have Found no Clue to Whereabouts of the Doctor Accused of Wife Murder.

NEW YORK, July 16.—The search for Dr. Hawley Crippen, American physician, accused of the murder in London last February of his wife, Belle Elmore, American concert hall singer, is now literally worldwide. The police of every country to which Crippen and Ethel Clare Le Neve, the young typist, may have fled, were put on the lookout for the pair. Every port for which British ships or French ships sailed July 9, or thereafter, began to search incoming vessels, armed with accurate descriptions of the man and the woman. This wireless message was sent broadcast to the furthest seas:

Word was received by wireless from Commander Cannon of the steamship Minnetonka, bound toward New York, that no one on board answers the description of the fugitives.

Cable dispatches from London intimated the belief that Crippen and the young woman are still hiding in London. The chief of Scotland Yard hazarded the prophecy that they would be apprehended within 48 hours.

Ethel Clare Le Neve, it developed today, is not a French woman, but an English girl of the name of Neave. She adopted the French name at the request of the physician. Her father [illegible] in the belief that his daughter had also been murdered. He said that she had been in constant fear of her employer and had often told him of it.

Scotland Yard today advertised in papers throughout the United Kingdom and on the continent in "personals" addressed to Ethel Clare Le Neve, the stenographer-companion of the fugitive doctor, urging the girl to betray him to the police. They hope that this will aid them in retrieving the blunder of allowing the doctor his liberty upon "honor" after he had told conflicting stories about the disappearance of his wife.

Crippen's bank account was in Belle Elmore's name and she drew all checks. That money is intact. Belle Elmore's jewels were worth about $5,000, and these are all gone. If they were pawned in the United Kingdom or anywhere else they will be discovered. Without them it is not believed that Dr. Crippen could have had more than $300. This would not take him far, particularly as he would have to pay dearly for his secrecy.

Reports from London late today stated that search was being made for a French maid employed by Mrs. Crippen at No. 39 Hilldrop Crescent, North London. It was feared that she also had been done away with.

Thorough examination of the Crippen residence and grounds has disposed of the theory that the premises had been used as a burying ground for bodies other than the one found. Not a sign of another corpse was discovered, the police say.

THATCHER TO CELEBRATE HIS SEMICENTENNIAL

DENVER, July 16.—The fiftieth anniversary of his arrival in Denver will be celebrated tomorrow by Joseph A. Thatcher, president of the Denver National bank, and friends will extend their congratulations to him upon his success in Colorado. Thatcher represents the true specimen of pioneer. Coming here from Kansas City, making the trip in 47 days of uncertainty, he entered into the life of the little settlement with zeal. He sent his partner, John Ralston, back to Missouri, and bought on credit $80,000 worth of merchandise and established a store. This business, which grew rapidly, was the foundation of his fortune.

LYNCHING THWARTED BY SALIDA OFFICER

SALIDA, Colo., July 16.—A lynching was narrowly averted today by Chief of Police A. A. Bailey, who broke through a mob and took the intended victim, a Mexican, in charge as he was about to be strung up to an electric light pole. The man came to Salida this morning and entered a restaurant on the main street to get breakfast. He became quarrelsome and the cook, Harry Rose, ordered him out. He refused to leave and Rose ejected him. As the cook turned to re-enter the restaurant the Mexican stabbed him in the back. He is in a critical condition.

TWO STEAMERS COLLIDE; REACH PORT CRIPPLED

NEW YORK, July 16.—The British steamer Karema, which sailed from here Tuesday for the orient, returned this afternoon in distress, having been in collision Wednesday morning in a dense fog 25 miles southeast of Nantucket with the British steamer Regulus from Wabana, N. F., for Philadelphia. The Karema was so badly damaged that she was barely able to make port. The Regulus reached Philadelphia today with her forehold full of water and her bow badly twisted.

ALASKA VOLCANO IS IN ERUPTION

SHISHALDIN'S GIGANTIC TORCH SEEN BY MARINES.

Flame Blazes Up Hundreds of Feet and Melting Snow Pours in Torrents Down Mountain.

SEATTLE, Wash., July 16.—Mount Shishaldin, Alaska, on the eastern end of Unimak island, has lighted its gigantic torch again, according to news brought by the steamer Montara, which arrived from Nome today.

The Montara first sighted the burning mountain on the morning of the ninth, when the steamer entered Unimak pass. The sea was turbulent, as if disturbed by some seismic movement. A clear column of flame, hundreds of feet high, without smoke, blazed from the volcano's crater.

After passing through Unimak pass, Captain J. O. Farris turned the Montara east, so as to pass along to the south side of the island. When 50 miles away from the volcano, the officers of the ship could see through glasses that there was snow within a few hundred feet of the edge of the flames, and that torrents of water made by the rapidly melting snow were cutting channels in the steep sides of the mountain.

Later in the day smoke began to belch forth with the flames. The snow became blackened from the deposit. Aside from a few Indian fishermen, the only men on Unimak island are two lighthouse tenders at Scotch Cap.

Mount Shishaldin is a snow-capped mountain 9,000 feet high. On the other end of the island is Pogromni mountain, which is always in partial eruption. The Montara saw no activity on Pogromni.

A cable dispatch from Valdez, Alaska, to the Associated Press, says that a volcanic sand island has arisen in the lagoon formed last year, when the Aleudan volcano, Bogoslof, threw up a reef inclosing a portion of the sea.

REVOLUTIONARY PLOT DISCOVERED IN SPAIN

Troops Held in Readiness for Instant Service—Guards About Palace Doubled.

MADRID, July 16.—The discovery of a revolutionary plot affecting every important city in Spain has startled the government, and a meeting of all cabinet officals has been called by Premier Canalajas for tomorrow.

The throne is tottering, according to authentic reports, and the government has ordered all troops in readiness for instant service.

The situation at Barcelona, chief anarchist headquarters, is more serious than it has been since the execution of Ferrero.

The discovery of a plot against the life of the king at Valladolid yesterday, when he was on his way to see the governor, is but part of the revolutionary scheme. The guards about the palace have been doubled and the personal body guard was today still further increased in spite of his protestations.

The government's opposition to the Catholic church has done little to placate the excitement radicals, particularly at Barcelona, according to reports.

Troops have been ordered to Gijon in preparation for a general strike called there.

FIRES IN KOOTENAI FOREST UNDER CONTROL

MISSOULA, Mont., July 16.—The forest fire conditions in western Montana are greatly improved tonight. The local forestry officials have received reports from the fires in the Kootenai forest are much less dangerous than yesterday, and that all of the fires in that district are under control. In the Coeur d'Alene forest nine fires are burning and conditions are serious enough to prevent the supervisor from sending any of his men to help the Flathead reservation authorities in fighting the fire near Schley on the line of the Northern Pacific.

WAR AGAINST EXTORTION PROPOSED IN DENVER

DENVER, July 16.—War on the small shops in the down-town sections of the city, which are said to make a practice of holding up strangers for several times the value of goods sold them, has been taken up in earnest by the chamber of commerce and the retail trade committee is now trying to devise some means of getting evidence to prosecute the proprietors. The police department started a crusade on the extortionate prices in the lower part of the city several days ago, and since then a number of complaints have been received by the chamber of commerce.

HEAD OF MINE WORKERS COMING TO COLORADO

DENVER, July 16.—President Thomas E. Lewis of the United Mine Workers of America will be in Denver about August 1 to arbitrate the strike situation in the northern Colorado coal fields. He is coming of his own volition. Some of the local mine workers are opposed to the coming of Lewis for they would rather keep on with the fight than arbitrate the matter. They feel, however, that if Lewis takes a hand, the strike will be settled and that the miners will receive the concessions asked for in regard to an increase in the wage scale.

BUCKET BRIGADE CHECKS FIRE IN DEER TRAIL

DEER TRAIL, Colo., July 16.—Late last night fire started in G. S. Burton's store and, after destroying it, spread to a large hotel, a real estate office, Cummings' meat market and stable and the residence of Mrs. Maher, all of which were laid in ashes. A bucket brigade did good work and checked the spread of the flames.

OUR FAMOUS "INNOCENT"

MARK TWAIN AS THE AUTHORITATIVE SPECTATOR SEES HIM. Changing Fashions in Humor Seem to Have Left Him Behind, but His Fun Is Immortal for All That Great Reveler of Life.

From the London Spectator.

The fashion in humor changes with the generations, and no man could say whether posterity will hold the late S. L. Clemens, who made himself famous as Mark Twain, to be greater as a humorist or as a painter of phases of "the American scene" which have already passed away. The present generation itself is in some doubt. But whatever the relative values of Mark Twain's genius may be, there can be no doubt about this—that in the exercise of all his functions as a writer was a man of princely honor and of abounding generosity, who was always on the side of the angels, and who hated nothing so much as meanness and hypocrisy.

When "The Innocents Abroad" first fell into the hands of the English reader there was found to be a perfectly irresistible piquancy and drollery in its solemn exaggerations, and it was inevitable that the fruit should seem to lose some of its flavor when the taste of it became familiar. That is bound to happen with all fruit which has a strong and unmistakable character of its own. We have used the word "solemn" of Mark Twain's method of exaggeration because in point of fact this sort of exaggeration has to be offered in such a way that you can imagine the author speaking it without the movement of a muscle. If he appeared to be conscious of anything fantastic in the performance, its virtue would be gone. But in its effect there is, of course, nothing whatever solemn about the humor of Mark Twain. It rollicks. In this respect his humor differs from what a distinguished Frenchman has called the "gay melancholy" of our typical English humor. We all know what that means—the wistfulness of a humorist like Charles Lamb. The comparison must not be pressed very far, however, for we always have "The Pickwick Papers" rising up to controvert a general proposition. Let us say that the difference between English and American humor is no more than that which Mr. F. W. H. Myers detected between English and American girls. English humor, like the English girl, is the natural product of the country "whose old world heart more gravely feels."

Much time might be wasted on comparing two contrary theories when it might be profitably spent in enjoying them. We all know specimens of Mark Twain's characteristic extravagance and whimsicality of phrase which so often seem to be challenging the criticism that they are flippant, but which are nearly always saved from going over onto the wrong side of the line by the chivalry and ample sanity of the man. His telegram to an American newspaper which had announced his death that the report was "greatly exaggerated" is famous. So is his comment when a performer on the American stage gave an imitation of him as a lecturer: "There's no doubt one of us must be wrong." Only a few weeks ago when his last illness was taking hold of him he admitted that it was serious, but remarked that it was not such as to "excite an undertaker." It has been said that no man confidently believes in his religion who cannot afford sometimes to laugh about it. The necessary confidence appears in Mark Twain's belief that human life is an admirable thing, and that human foibles are lovable things.

Harmless in His Satire.

In "The Innocents Abroad" he ridiculed to the top of his bent what many of his countrymen and countrywomen who tour Europe gaze upon with a reverent but dull stupefaction. He was a satirist and yet his satire often escaped the definition because it was not his practice—indeed he was incapable of it—to lunge with a rapier or rub acid into a wound. He was not savage like Swift or terribly compact and trenchant like Juvenal. If the reader felt that he was being satirized at all, he had, after reading many pages of Mark Twain, only a very vague image of himself as an ass. And somehow the portrait caused no animosity against the painter. Perhaps the best example of the manner in which Mark Twain could never smother or put out of sight his just sympathies and chivalry is his "Personal Recollections of Joan of Arc," though we are by no means recommending the book as a fair example of his genius. He was most unfortunate and most nearly approached positive offense, in his "A Yankee at the Court of King Arthur." To the prig Mark Twain probably appeared to be an incurable Philistine. He was never in the narrow and restricted sense a man of letters; he was not a student. A reader of "A Tramp Abroad" will notice that his literary equipment—at all events, his one but sufficient source of inspiration—is "Baedeker," and that his gift of fun and his close observation do the rest. There are things in that book which will always be an integral part of American humor however much the fashion of humor may change. There is the account of the voyage on a glacier; there is the description of French dueling, there is the masterly narrative of the blue jay which tried to fill a house with acorns; and there is the appendix on the technicalities of the German language. The following brief sentences in which Mark Twain introduces his reader to the city of Frankfort are characteristic of him in every way:

The "Innocent" in Frankfort.

"Frankfort is one of the 16 cities which have the distinction of being the place where the following incident occurred. Charlemagne while chasing the Saxons (as he said) or, being chased by them (as they said), arrived at the bank of the river at dawn in a fog. The enemy was either before him or behind him; but in any case he wanted to get across very badly. He would have given anything for a guide, but none was to be had. Presently he saw a deer, followed by her young, approach the water. He watched her, judging that she would seek a ford, and he was right. She waded over and the army followed. So a great Frankish victory or defeat was gained or avoided, and in order to commemorate the episode, Charlemagne commanded a city to be built there, which he named Frankfort—the ford of the Franks. None of the other cities where this event happened were named for it. This is good evidence that Frankfort was the first place it occurred at."

The account of an imaginary duel fought by Gambetta is inimitable with its mock-heroics, the invention of the dying remark, "I die that France may live!" the studied attitude of the great man, "which for sublimity has never been approached by man and has seldom been surpassed by statuary," and the denouement in which the rotund Gambetta, gasping out a portion of the misremembered message to his country, falls heavily backwards upon Mark Twain and crushes him to the ground, so that the latter is the only person injured in the encounter. The present writer is much attached to the account of the climbing of the Rigi and the repeated attempt to see the sunrise, always rendered abortive by the heavy sleep of the exhausted mountaineers, who sleep well into the hours of daylight. In the culmination they leap from their beds and rush out into the open air attired in blankets, according to the fashion of the hotel, only to find to their astonishment that the glorious orb, touching the tops of the snowy peaks with radiance, is somehow moving in the wrong direction.

A Master of the Honest Laugh.

They are, in fact, just in time for the sunset. Mark Twain was a master of the honest laugh. And he could have said of his writings as Sir Walter Scott humbly said of his own, that he thanked God that no one was ever the worse for reading them. No one who knew the man from the style was surprised when Mark Twain declared with an ultrasensitive scrupulosity that the failure of a publishing company in which he was concerned laid a personal obligation on him to pay all its debts. He worked day and night at writing and lecturing till within five years by his own labor he had paid to every one of the creditors a hundred cents on the dollar.

There is perhaps even more reason why Mark Twain should be remembered as a describer of life and character than as a humorist. It is impossible to read any of his books without noticing how the experiences of his early life, spent in navigating the Mississippi, had laid hold of his soul. The pilotage of the river required that he should see through, as it were, the opaqueness of the water and know every flat, snag, hillock, cranny and swatchway which lay beneath. And this habit of marine clairvoyance made him ever a close and almost microscopic observer. The trade of the Mississippi, as he knew it, was killed by the Civil war, and "The Adventures of Tom Sawyer" and its still greater sequel, "Huckleberry Finn," have all the value of a history of those dead days. No reader who has beheld the swamp blossom at the bidding of Mark Twain's art could ever feel that the miseries of Martin Chuzzlewit's Eden, vivid and telling as they are, represent more than one side of the truth. The books about the Mississippi have a grasp which is equaled by their reach; they have tolerance, fertility and, above all, a wonderful understanding of a boy's character. They embody a faithful reproduction of the Missouri negro dialect, the dialect of the southwestern backwoods, and the "Pike county" dialect. Having just delved in these books again, we feel as certain as we can feel of anything that they will live always in the first rank of American literature. They are great because they are simple. It should never be forgotten that great works of literature are not always produced by "literary" men. The directness, sincerity and simplicity of Moliere and Cervantes will always appeal to the human heart more than the faultless wit of Voltaire or the witty learning of Rabelais.

CAREFUL CONSIDERATION TO BE GIVEN TO PAVING MEASURE BEFORE IT IS ADOPTED

According to a decision reached yesterday by the Mayor and City Council, the ordinance providing for the paving of the downtown district will not be passed for about three weeks, as the Council is anxious to give ample time for consideration of the measure so that it will be proof against all legal attacks. The first step to be taken will be the passage of the improvement measure, then an ordinance defining the boundaries of the paving district will be put through, and finally an ordinance ordering the paving laid in this district will be passed. The estimates from the city engineer as to the cost and specifications of the work will then be published and the Council will call for bids, the contract to be awarded to the lowest responsible bidder. It is expected that the work will be started this fall, and probably before the end of the year the entire district will be paved.

The accompanying sections of the public improvement ordinance indicate how the money will be raised to pay for the paving so as to avoid a special bond election. Public improvement warrants will be issued, bearing interest at 5 per cent, payable semi-annually. The details are explained in the following sections.

Sections of Ordinance.

Section 40. Bonds—Warrants—Denominations—Record—Payment—Use or Sale. All local improvements shall be paid for by public improvement bonds or warrants of the city, of such date and in such form as may be prescribed by the council, bearing the name of the street, alley or district improved and payable to the bearer in a sufficient period of years to cover the period of payment above provided, but subject to call as hereinafter provided, and in convenient denominations of not more than $1,000 each. All such bonds and warrants shall be issued by the city treasurer upon the estimates of the city engineer, and the city treasurer shall preserve a record of the same in a suitable book kept for that purpose. All such bonds and warrants shall be subscribed by the mayor, attested by the city clerk and the seal of the city, and registered by the city auditor, said bonds and warrants to be payable out of the moneys collected on account of the assessments made for said improvements, respectively, and all moneys collected from such assessments for any improvement shall be applied to the payment of all bonds and warrants issued, until payment be made of all of said bonds or warrants; provided that such bonds or warrants may be used by the city council at par, in payment for engineering and other clerical expenses and cost of inspection; or the mayor, with the approval of the council, may, upon advertisement for not less than 10 days in some newspaper of general circulation, published in the city, sell sufficient of said bonds or warrants at not less than par to pay the expenses mentioned in this proviso, in cash.

Section 4. Rate of Interest—Interest Coupons. All such bonds and warrants shall bear interest not exceeding 6 per cent per annum, as may be ordered by the council, the interest to be paid semi-annually, evidenced by coupons, attested by a facsimile of the signature of the city auditor.

All such bonds and warrants, principal and interest, shall be payable at the city of Colorado Springs, but if the council so orders they may also be payable at some national bank or trust company in the city of New York, in the state of New York, to be designated by the council. In all cases, the bonds, warrants and coupons shall recite the place or places of payment, and when payable, in the city of New York, the city treasurer is hereby authorized to remit the funds necessary for their payment, with exchange, to the institution so designated, always assuring himself that such institution is perfectly insolvent. The council may by ordinance passed by four of its members thereof, on behalf of the city, guarantee the payment of any bonds or warrants issued under the provisions of this ordinance.

Section 42. Redemption and Purchase of Bonds. Whenever considered prudent by the city treasurer, he may, and whenever funds may be in his hands to the credit of any improvement district, exceeding six months interest on the unpaid principal, he shall by advertisement for five days in some newspaper, call in a suitable number of the bonds or warrants of such district for payment, and at the expiration of 30 days from the first publication of said notice the interest on the bonds and warrants so called shall cease. The notice shall specify the bonds or warrants so called by numbers, and all bonds and warrants shall be paid in their numerical order. The holder of any bonds or warrants may at any time furnish his postoffice address to the city treasurer and in such case a copy of said advertisement shall be mailed by the treasurer to the holder of the bonds or warrants called, at said address, on the first day of said publication.

DIRECTORS ELECTED

Stockholders of Jack Pot Mining Co. Find There Is Substantial Surplus in Treasury.

The stockholders of the Jack Pot Mining company at the deferred annual meeting yesterday elected the following directors: H. M. Carlton, A. E. Carlton, F. H. Gay, Daniel Thatcher and John T. Hawkins. The question of what to do with the large account of Doctor-Jack Pot and Jennie Sample stock, which is held in the treasury of the company, should be disposed of by distribution among the stockholders resulted in a strong vote for keeping the stock where it is.

According to the report of F. H. Gay, assistant secretary, the company has been able to make up $26,000 indebtedness and has in addition at the present time a surplus to its credit. The election of officers will be held at the next meeting of the directors.

LONG-PENDING LAWSUIT OVER CHURCH PROPERTY COMES UP TOMORROW MORNING

Attorneys J. A. Orr and W. C. Robinson are dusting their Bibles today in preparation to fight a case tomorrow in the district court which involves theological questions dating back to 1810, and religious tenets from the time of Abraham may be called into requisition. Orr is especially studious, for in a flight of oratory in arguing a case recently he became badly tangled up between Potiphar's wife and Pharaoh's daughter, and had to be rebuked by Judge Morris for slandering a royal princess. He is giving his Bible a good thumbing today.

The case in question is that of W. D. Marlow et al., against the First Cumberland Presbyterian church of Colorado Springs, for possession of all the church property. For an understanding of the matter it is necessary to hark back to 1810. In that year three clergymen, members of the Presbyterian synod in Tennessee, took exception to the stand taken by the synod on predestination, and, after the usual controversy, seceded. They established the Cumberland Presbyterian church, and it flourished to such an extent that in 1906 the denomination claimed 250,000 members and millions of dollars worth of property. Four years ago the Presbyterians saw the error of their ways, and revised the predestination theory to conform with the views held by the three fathers of the Cumberland faith, and the two church denominations were reunited by resolutions of their respective synods.

But all over the country there were some persons of the Cumberland faith who claimed that the reunion was not legal, and in the courts of at least a dozen states suits were started to retain possession of the church property. Decisions from the supreme courts of nine of these states have been handed down, the last decision being in Arkansas only three days ago. In Texas, Georgia, Kentucky, Indiana, Illinois, Arkansas and California, the supreme courts have decided that the reunion was legal, and that those who sought to get a strangle hold on the church property are in error. In Missouri and Tennessee the supreme courts decided against the reunion.

When the question arose in this city, there were 77 members of the First Cumberland Presbyterian church of Colorado Springs, and of these 68 were in favor of the reunion. The other nine, including W. D. Marlow, objected and entered suit for the church property. In this state there are only three other cities having churches of this denomination—Pueblo, Canon City and Sterling—but the only suit started was in this city. The hearing will come up tomorrow before Judge Owen. Attorney Robinson will represent the defendant and Attorney Orr will act for the plaintiff.

FOUR MORE CONTESTANTS

Much Interest Manifested in Race for a Queen of the Moose Fair

That the queen of the Moose fair contest promises to be a most interesting one is shown by the interest already taken in it by all classes. Four new contestants were nominated yesterday. They were: Miss Katherine Barker, Miss Anna G. McAndrews, Mrs. Billie Tate and Mrs. Cora Halstead. These ladies are all popular in the community and with so much youth and beauty to choose from the Moose queen contest will be a memorable one in the annals of the city. Each candidate has many supporters who are determined to do their best to get their favorite elected and the result is sure to be close.

The honor, to say nothing of the very handsome ring the lodge will present to the queen-elect, is well worth working for and the first queen of the Moose in Colorado will be an envied woman when the final result is made known. The standing of the various candidates is as follows, the score being taken at 10 o'clock last evening:

HARDWARE MEN HERE

About 250 Arrived Yesterday—Equal Number Expected Today—Will See the Sights.

About 250 delegates from the National Retail Hardware Dealers convention in Denver arrived in the city yesterday afternoon and spent the evening at the various resorts in the region. Today will be taken up with the Short Line trip to Cripple Creek, for which a special train will be run, leaving here at 8:20 a. m. and returning between 5 and 6 p. m.

The visitors will spend their time as they please tomorrow until 4 o'clock, when they will attend a picnic at Stratton park, to be followed by a dance. The other arrangements will be made by the local committee after consulting the wishes of the visitors. A committee of local business men met each train yesterday and showed the hardware men about the city and looked after their comfort in the best manner possible. About 250 are expected to come up from Denver today.

SALARY INCREASE FOR 12 POSTAL EMPLOYES

By a recent order of the postal department, 12 employes of the Colorado Springs office will receive promotion and a consequent raise of wages. Nine will get $1,200 instead of $1,100, one will be raised from $900 to $1,000, and three from $600 to $800. Three clerks in the Colorado City office were raised from $600 to $800.

ANOTHER PIONEER DIES

Zedekiah MacNew, 76 Years Old, Succumbs to a Complication of Diseases.

The death of Zedekiah MacNew from a complication of diseases, yesterday morning at 7:30 o'clock, marked the passing of another pioneer of the Pikes Peak region. Mr. MacNew who had resided here for 34 years, was 76 years old. He is survived by his wife, Emily Ralston MacNew, and six children, Mrs. Orpha Barr, 411 East Cache la Poudre street; Juanita MacNew, 905 South Nevada avenue; Sherman MacNew, formerly police captain of Colorado Springs, and Mrs. Dilly Harper, both of Hugo; Stanton MacNew, Pueblo, and Calvin MacNew of California.

Mr. MacNew was born in Ripley county, Indiana, in 1834, and came to Colorado Springs in 1876, since which time he has taken an active part in the city's progress. He was at one time an owner of a portion of the present site of Glen Eyrie, and was a friend of the late General Palmer as well as of many other early residents of the region. For some time he lived in Lincoln county, east of Colorado Springs, where he was ranching, but two months ago removed to 905 South Nevada avenue, where he died.

The funeral will be held from the undertaking rooms of Fairleys and Law tomorrow afternoon at 2:30 o'clock.

Mr. MacNew is the third pioneer to die within the last few days, the others being John Potter, the first postmaster of Colorado Springs, who died here last Thursday, and James Monroe Sigafus, whose death occurred at the Virginia Dale mining camp, in the San Bernardino desert, California, last Wednesday.

MOTION DENIED

Judge Owen Refuses to Set Aside O'Brien-Bolles Hearing. Continues Case.

The motion to have set aside the hearing of the petition for an accounting of the funds of the Florida Fruit Lands company and for a receiver, was argued in the district court yesterday before Judge Owen, and was denied. The petition was filed some time ago by William O'Brien against his partner, Richard J. Bolles, and the attorneys for the defense moved for a dismissal of the petition on the grounds of insufficiency of evidence. Judge Owen took the contrary view and set the hearing of the petition for next Wednesday. The details of the case, which involves the ownership of nearly 1,000,000 acres of land in Florida, have often been published.

O'Brien is represented by Attorneys Henry C. Hall of this city and John R. Smith of Denver. Bolles is represented by Governor Jennings of Florida and Attorney Henry McAllister of Denver, and the interests of the company are being looked after by former Governor C. S. Thomas of Denver.

WONDERFUL CURE OF SORE HANDS

Skin Pooled and Flesh Got Hard and Broke Blood Flowed in Fifty Places "Single Box of Cuticura Ended Suffering."

About eleven years ago I was troubled with sore hands, so sore that when I would put them in water the pain would very nearly set me crazy, the skin would peel off and the flesh would get hard and break. There would be blood flowing from at least fifty places on each hand. Words could never tell the suffering I endured for three years. I tried everything that I was told to use for fully three years, but could get no relief. I tried at least eight different doctors, but none of them seemed to do me any good, as my hands were as bad when I got through doctoring as when I first began. I also tried many remedies, but none of them ever did me one cent's worth of good. I was discouraged and heartsore. I would feel so bad mornings when I got up, to think I had to go to work and stand the pain for ten hours, and I often felt like giving up my position.

Before I started to work mornings I would have to wrap every finger up separately, so as to try and keep them soft and then wear gloves over the rags to keep the grease from getting on my work. At night I would have to wear gloves in bed. In fact, I had to wear gloves all the time. After doctoring for three years, and spending much money, a single box of Cuticura Ointment ended all my sufferings. It's been eight years since I used any and I don't know what sore hands are now, and never lost a day's work while using Cuticura. (Signed) THOMAS A. CLANCY,

ASKS DIVORCE FROM COL. BURTON BURNHAM

Suit Alleging Cruelty and Desertion Filed Against Local Man in Salem, Mass.

Alleging that her husband's affections have been alienated by his foster mother, Mrs. Ethel Burton Burnham has filed suit for separate maintenance in the courts of Salem, Mass., against Maj Franklin J Burnham of this city, prominent clubman and adjutant of the Second regiment, Colorado National guard. The complaint alleges that Major Burnham deserted his wife two years ago for the company of Mrs. Maria A. Burnham, widow of the late I. G. Burnham, a wealthy coal dealer of Swampscott, Mass., and the woman who adopted him when a child and reared him to manhood.

Mrs Burnham in her complaint further alleges that her husband has been guilty of repeated acts of cruelty even to the extent of striking her with his fists and that she has been left without means of support. The couple were married five years ago and lived in a fashionable residence in Brookline until two years ago, when the alleged separation occurred Major Burnham came to Colorado Springs two years ago and since that time has been prominent in society and club circles. He has been living in bachelor apartments at 217 East Columbia street and is at present at Palmer Lake to attend the encampment of his regiment. Before leaving yesterday morning he declined to discuss the suit brought against him by his wife

SHAKESPEARE IS HERE

Guest at Cliff House Not Related to "Bard of Avon," However. Other Guests.

Charles Baird Shakespeare is among the names appearing on the Cliff house register yesterday, and although Mr Shakespeare doesn't claim to be an immediate relative of the "Bard of Avon," his distinguished cognomen is attracting considerable attention. While Mr Shakespeare doesn't look much like a poet, to say the plain truth, many of the young women about the verandas are whispering to each other that they believe he could write "perfectly beautiful" poetry, but as yet, so far as can be learned, Mr Shakespeare hasn't tried

Registered with this gentleman who clearly belongs to the class of those who have had fame thrust upon them, are Mrs H P. Kingsbury, the Misses Kingsbury and Slocum Kingsbury, all of Fort Robinson, Neb The party belongs to the coterie of army officers' families at the fort

"MOVES ON" WHEN TOLD

Queer Character and His Badger Get Short Shrift From Town Marshal

Can a man "move on" who can't walk? This question didn't trouble Marshal Woodman very long yesterday, when an odd looking carry-all in the shape of a 'one-hoss shay' hove into sight down Manitou avenue. Placarded upon the sides of the cover to the vehicle were the words "I can't walk, I am deaf, Am showing a young badger for a livin" The driver, who, save for the badger, was unaccompanied, bore the euphonous and old-fashioned appellation of Obediah Obermann and in addition to this was somewhat lame, but the officer ruthlessly urged him to move on intimating that his room was more desirable than his company The aged man took the hint

OFFICER ARRESTED

Marshal Woodman Charged With Assaulting Youth in Argument Over Dog Tax

The somewhat perplexing question of who is papa when papa's away, or who is the arrester when the town marshal is the arrestee, arose in Manitou Friday night, when one of the Farmer boys, who dips water at the soda springs caused Marshal Woodman of assault, and had him arrested

The alleged assault occurred when the two engaged in an argument over the collection of a dog tax by the officer Farmer alleges that the marshal became violent and assaulted him The case will be tried tomorrow in Justice McFarland's court

WANTS $15,000 DAMAGES

City Asked to Pay This Amount to Miss Genevieve Price for Personal Injuries.

As a result of injuries received early on the night of June 9, when she stepped into an open end of a ditch box, Miss Genevieve Price of 316 Chestnut street has presented a claim to the city officials for $15,000 damages. The accident, according to the young lady, occurred at Platte avenue and Spruce street, when she, in company with a young man, were running to catch a street car.

Following the accident, Miss Price was taken to the home of Commissioner Frost, where it was found that three of her teeth were knocked out and she sustained a deep cut just below the knee, and what is believed to be a fracture of the tibia bone. She was later removed to a hospital.

According to the officials, the ditch box at the point where Miss Price was injured is the same as hundreds of others in the city, and they do not see where the city should be held liable for the accident through any alleged carelessness or neglect on the part of the person injured.

KING IS ARBITER IN BRITISH CRISIS

NATION'S FUTURE DEPENDENT UPON HIS WILL.

Suffrage Based Upon Property Qualifications, and Power Is in Hands of Aristocracy.

By FREDERIC J. HASKIN.

XI—WHO RULES GREAT BRITAIN?

LONDON, July 8.—If, five years ago, the question, "Who rules Great Britain?" had been asked, anybody and everybody would have replied, "The people, through the machinery of political parties operating in parliament." But the events of the past five years, culminating in the constitutional crisis precipitated last November by the rejection of the budget in the house of lords, have proved that this question is not to be answered so easily. If the people rule, why is it that a government twice victorious at the polls is thwarted in its efforts to enact legislation by an irresponsible and unchanging house of lords? If the people rule, why is it that a government twice intrusted with power from the people is compelled to ask the king for power to force the upper house of parliament to obey the popular mandate?

As a matter of fact, the people do not rule in Great Britain. The British government is not a government of parties, but, in the last analysis, is a government of one party, the party of aristocracy and privilege. The king is more than a mere ornamental figurehead. In a crisis such as this the king still is the potential ruler of the country, and upon his will may depend its whole future.

The word "people" does not mean the same thing in English politics that it means in American politics. There is a distinction and a difference which always must be borne in mind by Americans in discussing English politics. In Great Britain "the people" are the voters, and the suffrage is based entirely upon property qualifications and not upon citizenship, as it is in America.

Property Suffrage.

Unless a man is the owner or user of a certain amount of real property, he cannot vote. And, if he owns real estate in 50 different parliamentary constituencies he has 50 votes. The large landed proprietors who own real estate all over the country are practically all supporters of the Conservative party, so that this system of plural voting operates always to the advantage of the Tories and to the disadvantage of the Liberals. The elections are strung out for more than two weeks, giving full opportunity to register the plural ownership vote. In the last election there were returned to the house of commons 275 Liberals, 273 Unionists or Conservatives, 71 Irish Nationalists, 11 Independent Nationalists and 40 Labor members. This gave the Liberals a bare plurality of two votes over the Conservatives, making it necessary for them to enter into a coalition with the Laborites and Nationalists to form a government.

This narrow margin was hailed in all quarters of the world as a virtual defeat for the Liberals and in Great Britain it operated to encourage the Conservative and reactionary forces to further efforts in opposition to the Radical social and political program. As a matter of fact, this strong Conservative showing was largely the result of the system of voting which gives to one Conservative perhaps 20 votes, and at the same time denies the suffrage to perhaps 20 Radicals.

No less than 78 of the 273 Conservative members returned were elected in divisions where the nonresident ownership vote exceeded the Conservative candidates' majorities. In other words, even with the same property qualifications for suffrage now in force, if plural voting had been prevented, the elections would have returned 353 Liberals and only 195 Conservatives, giving the Liberals a clear plurality of 158 instead of only 2. These figures are given on the authority of the British prime minister, and are the result of an official investigation. Of course, there are a few plural voters who are Liberals, but they are not numerous enough to materially affect these conclusions.

Disfranchised Classes.

On the other hand, there are several millions of male adults who are not entitled to vote because they neither own property nor do they pay a sufficient amount of rent as occupiers or lodgers to entitle them to the suffrage under the extremely complicated election laws of the kingdom. How these millions would vote if they were admitted to the franchise is of course problematical, but all authorities agree that the vast majority of them would ally themselves with the Radical party. That this is true is evidenced by the fact that the Liberals are committed to the doctrine of "one man, one vote." But of course no such radical election reform legislation can be secured so long as the house of lords retains its present power of veto. However, it is probable that a very large proportion of the present disfranchised lower classes would vote with the Conservatives on account of their subserviency to the liquor trade and, in the case of the farm laborers, to the influence of their employers.

The whole question of suffrage reform is bound up in the issue between the commons and the lords. If the lords are deprived of their veto power as proposed by Mr. Asquith, it is practically certain that any Liberal government would abolish plural ownership voting. But here the problem is complicated by the demand for woman suffrage. For a time the suffragettes made use of the slogan "One adult, one vote," which would have admitted all men and women of adult age to the suffrage without any restrictions whatever. But the sympathies of the suffragettes now are with the Conservative party, on account of the refusal of the Asquith government to grant their demands, so that the leaders of the suffragette cause are not so enthusiastic for general enfranchisement as they once were. Indeed, it now appears that the suffragettes are willing to accept a grant of suffrage on the same terms as the vote is now given to men, which means that perhaps one million women would be entitled to vote, all those not owning or using property in their own right being excluded.

Inequitable Apportionment.

Before it may be said with truth that the people rule in Great Britain, not only must the suffrage laws be revised, but there must be a redistribution of seats in parliament based upon an equitable apportionment of population. In Great Britain all political questions whatsoever are settled by the election of members of parliament. Any parliamentary constituency, returning one member has exactly as much political power as any other similar constituency. But in one there may be 70,000 voters, and in the other fewer than 3,000, while the discrepancy in population may be even greater. The redistribution bills following the great reform of 80 years ago, did much for the cause of popular government in England by the elimination of the rotten pocket boroughs, but much remains to be done. Even in the United States, with all of the tricks of the gerrymander, there is an approximate equal distribution of congressional seats in proportion to population. Nothing of the kind is even attempted in Great Britain.

The British parliamentary system, with a responsible ministry in charge of the administrative affairs of government, affords perhaps the best existing example of machinery adapted to the uses of true popular government, but as long as one class of the people is given the legal right to vote many times because of its wealth, as long as another class is entirely debarred from voting because of its poverty, and as long as representation in parliament is apportioned upon other considerations than that of population, it cannot be said that the machinery is in ideal working order.

Liberal Party Powerless.

The objection, urged against propositions to abolish the house of lords, that a single chamber legislature is a dangerous experiment, undoubtedly has great weight. Most successful parliamentary governments have found the bicameral system better adapted to deal with legislative problems. But at the same time, there is an increasing disposition in all parts of the world to make the upper chamber responsible to the public will. This is manifested in the United States in the quite general demand for the popular election of senators.

Even the most radical Liberals have not advocated the entire abolition of the house of lords, contenting themselves with a demand for the right of the commons to enact laws without the consent of the lords by twice passing the measure through the commons. Under that system the lords would have an advisory veto which would, in some measure, represent and conserve the force of that somewhat nebulous thing called the "sober second thought of the nation."

In the face of the record of events of the past five years, it is folly to pretend that the people rule in Great Britain. As long as the land-owning classes were able to control both political parties, which was always until 1906, that portion of the people permitted to vote did have the power and the right to control the affairs of the British government. It must be admitted that on the whole the system was successful, perhaps more successful than any other modern plan of government.

But with the increase in the number of people and the decrease in the number of landlords, the time came when one of the two great parties passed out of the control of the landowning class. And then the people of England found that they were ruled, not by themselves, but by the landed and tilted aristocracy and the king.

XII—THE LANDLORDS AND THE PEOPLE.

LONDON, July 9—Half of all the land in England is owned by 2,000 persons and more than half of all the 56,000,000 acres of England, Wales, Scotland and Ireland is owned by 5,300 persons. Two-thirds of all the land in the entire kingdom is owned by fewer than 10,000 persons. Of the population of 45,000,000 people, only 61,000 farmers cultivate land which they own. Twenty-seven dukes own more than 5,000,000 acres, the Duke of Sutherland alone possessing 1,350,000 acres. The dukes own approximately one-tenth of all the land in Great Britain. The farmers who own their own land are few indeed; and of that 61,000, fewer than 15,000 own more than 50 acres, the great majority possessing holdings of less than five acres in extent. And, according to British government statistics, one-third of the people of Great Britain are constantly on the verge of starvation.

The landlords own the country, and until now they have ruled the country with no one to dispute their will. They have never paid any taxes on their land. The land laws and the revenue laws have been framed always by the landlords in the interests of the aristocracy. Every political and social agency for centuries has been operating to increase the size of individual holdings of land and to make it more and more difficult for land to be sold or for estates to be divided.

The Lloyd-George budget was the first political attempt to interfere seriously with the privileges of the landlords, and its provisions would be regarded in any other country as being mild, almost to the point of futility. But the astonished landlords rose en masse and declared that Lloyd-George was a socialist, that his budget was confiscatory and that its operations would destroy the British empire and send its old nobility to the demnition bow-wows. That the owner of land should be forced to pay a tax upon it was a notion so novel, a proposition so preposterous, a crime so conscienceless, that it seemed to be altogether impossible. But the budget passed the commons, was rejected by the lords, was made the chief issue in a general election, was approved at the polls, and now is the law of England.

Land Never Taxed.

In the United States where a direct tax on the value of land is a generally accepted and approved method of raising taxes by and for the several states it is difficult to understand the British quarrel between landlords and people. In the first place England never has taxed land values. The revenue derived from real estate, known as "the rates," is calculated at so much per cent on the annual rent produced by the land. Practically all land is occupied by tenants, but in the few instances where the proprietor occupies his land he pays upon a fictitious annual rent, generally representing an infinitesimal fraction of the true rent value. In the case of the Cardiff tailor shop made famous in the recent campaign, it was shown that a tailor, occupying eight hundred square yards of land, paid rates on a rental valuation of $4,935, while the Marquis of Bute, who occupied Cardiff castle in the immediate neighborhood, paid for 5,000 square yards on a rental valuation of $4,605. Because Lloyd-George called attention to this enormous discrepancy, he was accused by the Conservative press of "calumny" and of slandering the noble Marquis of Bute. His effrontery in referring to this tailor shop was denounced all over the country as proving his utter unfitness for his high position as chancellor of the exchequer.

In every instance where land is rented, the tenant or lessee must pay the rates. The owner of the land never pays taxes on his own property. This system was arranged by the peers, who are the principal landowners, over 200 years ago when they exchanged to King William this money revenue, to be paid of theft tenants in lieu of all service, tenures and levies of soldiers due to the crown from the peers under the remaining rules of the feudal system.

Scheme Proposed.

So much has been said about the terrible, socialistic features of this land tax, it has been so often denounced and so seldom explained, that it is worth while to examine into its provisions in order to find out exactly what the British landlords are crying about. The new scheme of taxation is a complicated affair which at first can produce but little revenue, but it is regarded as an entering wedge. The principal proposals are threefold, the increment duty, the reversion duty and the undeveloped land duty.

The first provides that, in the future, the increase in the value of land due to the efforts of society as a whole, and in nowise to the industry or ingenuity of the owner, shall be regarded as unearned increment and that 20 per cent, or one-fifth, of such increase shall be paid to the treasury. This tax is to be paid only when the land is sold, or when it changes hands by reason of the death of the owner. In case it is owned by a corporation not liable to death duties, then the tax is to be paid in 1914 and each seventh year thereafter. The phrase "unearned increment," may startle some conservative Americans who are sensitive to the influence of bugaboos, but it must be remembered that in American states, every annual or biennial assessment takes into account for purposes of annual taxation not only the unearned increment but also the original value of the land.

Increment Feature.

If a farm in Missouri is assessed at a value of $5,000, and its value is enhanced $4,000 by improvements placed upon it by the owner and is still further increased by $7,000 because of the building of a new railroad, the state of Missouri would collect taxes on the total value, including improvements made at the expense of the owner as well as the unearned increment resulting from the advent of the railroad. In England under the Lloyd-George budget taxation, no tax would be levied upon the $5,000 original value nor upon the improvements, the only thing would be that when the land was sold, five years or 50 years hence, the government would take 20 per cent of the $7,000 unearned increment after allowing an exemption of the first 10 per cent increase to the owner tax free. In a country where land rarely is sold, it is difficult to see how this tax would work a hardship.

As a matter of fact, the Missouri farm would entirely escape taxation under the Lloyd-George system, for all purely agricultural land, all land worth less than $250 an acre, all property occupied by the owner as a home, is excepted from taxation absolutely. In other words, the tax would be levied only upon the landlord owners of rented property of high value used for other than agricultural purposes to which the community has contributed generously by increasing its value, and from which under the old system, no taxes could be collected. So much for the socialistic increment duty.

The second feature, the reversion duty is a tax of 10 per cent upon the value of the benefit accruing to land owners, from improvements made by the lessees, at the expiration of leases of longer than 21 years' duration. In England where nearly all improvements are made upon leased land, it is not unusual for a landlord, by the expiration of the lease, to become possessed of buildings and other improvements worth thousands and hundreds of thousands and even millions of dollars, for which he was in no way responsible. The government wants 10 per cent of the increase in value of his property thus created.

Would Tax Game Preserves.

The third feature is the tax on undeveloped land, a direct tax of a halfpenny in the pound, a trifle over 2 per cent, payable annually, the land to be reassessed every five years. This is the only one of the land taxes which is analagous to the general practice of state taxation in the United States. Strange to say it was the most objectionable feature of the entire Lloyd-George schema. The landlords could stomach an increment duty and a reversion duty, in which they were taxed to give to the state a portion of the money earned for them by the community, but they regarded as a monstrous imposition the taxation of their idle land. It was a blow aimed directly at the heart of the British aristocracy, for it meant a tax on the game preserves. The horrible suggestion was made that it might force some of the game preserves to be turned back to the vulgar uses of agriculture, in order that the land might come under the exceptions granted to farm lands.

Of course the government designed these taxes as much to make waste land holding unprofitable, and even to force a division of land, but it did to raise revenues. In this respect it may be said that the taxes were not bona fide revenue measures, but were aimed to break up, as far as possible, the present land system. The Tories made the most of the argument against this abuse of the taxing power, but in the same breath they clamored for a protective tariff to protect their wheat fields against the "pauper" wheat of America and Argentina.

As a matter of fact the new land taxes are not revolutionary, except in England. They are the same taxes as are imposed in France, in Germany, in the United States, in Australia, and in practically every civilized nation in the world. The hue and cry against the Lloyd-George budget came from a comparatively few of the people who live by the labor of the many, and who had come to regard their inequitable and unjust privileges as being the rightful reward of superiority.

GERMANY INTERESTED IN NICARAGUA.

View of Bluefields, Nicaragua, center of Nicaraguan dispute and trouble. Lower right, Kaiser Wilhelm, who has openly recognized the Madriz faction. At left, Secretary of State Knox, who will have a hard fight on his hands to prevent, through diplomacy, international dispute.

The letter addressed to President Madriz of Nicaragua and signed by William I of Germany, in which he calls him "great and good friend," and virtually upholds the Zelaya regime, is interpreted as a very serious matter in diplomatic circles. By thus throwing down the gauntlet to Uncle Sam, Germany is entering Central American and South American controversies which have hitherto been delegated largely to the United States by international powers. In his stand, Emperor Wilhelm takes the diametrically opposite view of Nicaraguan affairs to that held by Mr. Knox of the state department and diplomats generally. He acknowledges the election of Madriz as president of Nicaragua, which the United States state department has maintained was fraudulent.

FIND BOGUS COINS AT BOTTOM OF LAKE

Counterfeiters Traveling Overland by Wagon Trick Secret Service Officers and Evade Capture.

LOVELAND, July 16.—The finding of $200 worth of bogus gold coin in Boyd's lake, four miles north of Loveland, today, by George Heinrichy, a ranchman, proves that two of the cleverest men in the United States secret service and the town marshal of Loveland were tricked by counterfeiters.

A year ago northern Colorado was being flooded with counterfeit silver and gold coin, and secret service men were put on the trail. Two of these operators located a party of three men traveling overland in a wagon with a first-class camping outfit. These men camped near the inlet of Boyd's lake for several days.

They were suspected by secret service men and followed, and early one morning the camp was raided. The federal agents found in the wagon plenty of material with which bogus coins could be made, but the strangers insisted the stuff was being used in the manufacture of a silver polish, samples of which they exhibited. As the service men found no counterfeit coins or molds, the trio were allowed to go on their way.

This year the water in Boyd's lake is low, and this is how the bad money happened to be found. A search is being made for the molds used by the counterfeiters.

RESTAURANT GOWN SHOWING THE BANDED SKIRT

It takes an artist to hang these skirts caught in at the knee, but when rightly built they are most graceful. Like all this year's costumes this one has a noticeably simple bodice, the skirt being the part of the gown of which most labor is put. The model is of blue voile over salmon pink and the embroideries on the bodice are in shades of old blue, pale pink and tea rose. The hat, a Gage model faced with blue velvet and trimmed with pale pink satin and one huge tea rose, and the parasol of old blue silk, add emphasis to the lovely pale tones of the frock.

SAUSAGES ADULTERATED

Pure Food Commissioner Begins War on Denver Butchers Who Use Substitutes for Meat.

DENVER, June 1. Wilbur F. Cannon, pure food commissioner, has begun a war on butchers in Denver who are selling adulterated sausages. He has filed complaints with the district attorney against 55 butchers. The principal adulterants which the sausages were found to contain were cereal starch, saltpeter and sodium sulphate.

The starch was used because it will absorb water and in that way increase the weight of the sausages. The saltpeter and sulphate were used as preservatives.

"The pure food department has stopped the adulteration of meats in Denver to a large extent," said Mr. Cannon today. "One butcher in this city formerly bought formaldehyde by the carload. The use of this preservative has practically been stopped, however."

The pure food department has also discovered seven cases of adulterated ice cream in Denver and two in Grand Junction.

TWO COMPANIES DISBURSE $20,000,000 IN WAGES.

DENVER, July 16.—Two Colorado corporations paid out the enormous sum of $20,000,000 during the fiscal year ending June 30 for wages to employes. These two companies are the Colorado Fuel and Iron and the Denver & Rio Grande railroad. The figures show an increase over 1909. They were obtained from official sources, and are accepted as an indication of the development and growth of this territory.

WANTED A COLORADO SPRINGS SPIRIT.

IMAGINE, for a moment, that this is midsummer of the year 1911 instead of 1910, and that the business section of Colorado Springs is paved and its residence streets sprinkled with oil. Imagine, then, the kind of advertising campaign we are carrying on. The Chamber of Commerce is sending out advertising matter filled with such catch phrases as "Colorado Springs, the City Without Dust," "Spend Your Vacation in Dustless Town," "A Cool Breeze All the Time, but no Dust in Colorado Springs."

Imagine the effect on the prospective summer traveler who has been here before and has had his own experience with the dust from our unkempt streets. And finally imagine the relief with which, on coming here, he finds that the assertions are true. He can drive up one street and down another, anywhere in the city, over smooth, firm and most important of all dustless highways. He feels that after all Colorado Springs is what it has always claimed to be, the best and most beautiful summer resort in the West.

Sounds fine, doesn't it? But why not make the dream come true? There is no insuperable obstacle in the way; no lack of money with which to put the work through, no natural condition which cannot be overcome. Nothing is lacking but the determination to do it, and do it now. Then let's form this determination without delay and go ahead.

Nobody denies that Colorado Springs possesses unusual attractions to the pleasure seeker. It has an unsurpassed climate, cold enough to be invigorating in winter and cool enough to be comfortable in summer. Occasionally at this season we have a few hot days, but never as hot as in the East and South, and never is the heat accompanied with the humidity which makes life almost unbearable elsewhere. And best of all, the nights are always cool enough to make sleeping an unalloyed joy.

As for the beauty and grandeur of its environment, Colorado Springs is more fortunately situated than any other Western resort. No need here to dilate on the charms of the mountains, the canons, the driveways, the parks, and the various other sights and scenes. All of them are familiar and their attractiveness is undeniable.

THE SPIRIT OF GET TOGETHER AND HUSTLE. But when all of this is said we get back to the undeniable fact that Colorado Springs itself needs public improvements, and needs them so much that its whole future is bound up in the question of whether or not they shall be made without further delay. And this question is altogether one of public spirit. We need, we must have, an alert, aggressive Colorado Springs spirit, a spirit which will tolerate no backward step, no halt or hesitancy in the advancement of every movement which promises to make for a bigger, better, more beautiful Colorado Springs.

Mingled with the chorus of approval which has greeted expressions of The Gazette and The Herald on this subject is a smaller volume of criticism, based on the familiar fear that such outspoken candor would "hurt the town." We are not seriously worried over the danger of anything that has appeared in these columns injuring Colorado Springs, for its effect seems to us likely to be exactly the reverse. Bitter medicine is sometimes required to cure serious ailments, but if it seems likely to effect a cure the wise patient takes it with good grace. Colorado Springs might do worse than act on the advice it is now getting, which is simply to wake up, develop a public spirit, and make the public improvements which are so badly needed.

It is not entirely a matter of paving, by any means. If it were we should consider the problem all but solved, for the action of the Council last Monday in passing the paving ordinance bids fair to put an end to the controversy. But paving is only one of several factors which together make up the question of public improvements. Paving will suffice for the business streets, but what of the residence streets? Shall we leave them in their present unkempt condition, or shall we adopt the practice of up-to-date cities all over the country and sprinkle them with oil? And why not devote a little thought and energy to finding additional means of entertaining the tourists? Why not install a system of ornamental street lighting, in the business section, such as is used in Denver, substituting these posts for the unsightly wooden poles?

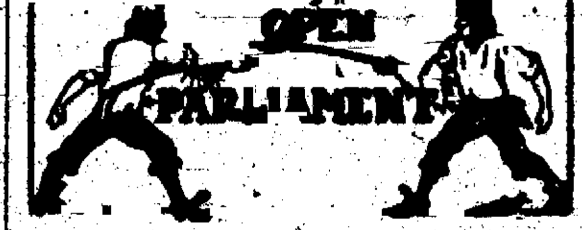

If there were a properly organized Colorado Springs spirit it would not tolerate the fencing in of half of the street in front of every new building under construction, nor would it tolerate the maintenance of dirty, rubbish-strewn vacant lots in the very center of the city. Of course it could not compel the owner to make costly improvements, but it at least could induce him to keep his lot clean and presentable.

IMPROVE BUSINESS PROPERTY. A wideawake, hustling Colorado Springs spirit would discourage the perpetuation in the business district of a lot of tumbledown shacks, some of them of wood, which were built thirty-five years ago, and whose owners spend just enough money for maintenance to make them habitable, refusing to replace them with modern buildings because the old shacks yield a larger return on the investment.

We do not cherish the delusion that even the most enthusiastic Colorado Springs spirit could compel property owners to erect fine and costly buildings when there is no need for them, no chance of their proving profitable investments. But it could do this much: it could create an atmosphere which would be distinctly unhealthful for a property owner who obstinately blocked the march of progress by refusing to improve his property when it was plain that such improvement would be a sound, business investment, even though it might not yield as large a return as was had from the old building.

It is time to wake up and think of these things. One of the Western railroad officials whose interview was printed in The Gazette yesterday observed that while Colorado Springs is known in the East as a beautifully situated resort, it is also known as "a very dusty city." We cannot deny the truth of this criticism, but we can and must remedy the condition on which it is based. Dust is not an ineradicable evil, like the stifling heat of Chicago or the never-ending rainfall of the Pacific Northwest. It can be got rid of if the right effort is made. All we need is the spirit of determination to do things and do them now, a hustling, aggressive, competently-organized Colorado Springs spirit.

Think it over. In the expressive vernacular of the sporting editors, it's the one best bet.

A SUGGESTION.

To the Editor of The Gazette:

Your editorial of this morning suggests that while the few tourists are enjoying light, air and scenery on "Seeing Colorado Springs" cars it would be a good idea to have the announcer proclaim through the business district something like this: "The owner of that property opposes street paving and public improvements."

OIL THE STREETS!

To the Editor of The Gazette:

The problem of the dust nuisance in this city is one which should engage the earnest attention of every citizen.

While we have been calmly allowing clouds of dust to follow every automobile, the cities of the east have studied and overcome the difficulty.

It is proposed to sprinkle, with oil, a small section of our public highways as "an experiment." Allow me to say that the use of oil or preparations of tar on public highways is no longer in the experimental stage.

I was surprised recently to discover, from personal observation, that Boston and its suburbs have literally converted their watering carts into oil carts, and keep their streets well coated with oil. As a consequence, the streets of those cities and towns are absolutely dustless.

The same method is used in New Jersey and New York.

What the east has successfully done, we of the progressive west should not have delayed so long in accomplishing.

A properly oiled street not only is dustless but is not disintegrated by automobiles.

Let us take to heart the lesson taught us by both California and the east, and at once proceed to the well-tested remedy of oiling our streets.

A kindred nuisance, which could as easily be remedied, is that of smoke. A casual survey of the city from any adjacent point, such as the mesa, shows this city enveloped, on a calm day, in a cloud of smoke.

The chief, but not by any means the only offenders, are the railroads. The large smoke stack of the Colorado Springs Electric company is another prolific smoke producer.

There is today an ordinance prohibiting the emission from chimneys of clouds of smoke. Why is it not enforced?

Let the citizens of Colorado Springs only put their shoulders to the wheel, and this city can, without any great difficulty or expense, be made both dustless and smokeless.

We cannot act too soon or too earnestly.

KEEP IT UP, HE SAYS.

To the Editor of The Gazette:

I want to compliment you on your editorial in this morning's issue, "What's the Matter With Colorado Springs?" I have been for the past two years advocating a policy of advertising the Pikes Peak region extensively to compete with advertising of competitive resorts, and now that you have taken this matter up I hope you will continue to keep it before the public until they realize that it is necessary to do something not only to hold what patronage we have had in the past but to build up the tourist business to what it should be.

WATCHING ROOSEVELT.

From the New York Evening Post.

The country cannot be blamed for thinking it significant that the Republican insurgents are flocking to Oyster Bay. When Mr. Roosevelt promptly invited Messrs. Pinchot and Garfield to visit him, it might have been thought of merely as a courtesy shown to old friends and former subordinates. But with La Follette and Senator Bristow—who had publicly complained that he was politically ostracised by the President—and Representatives Madison and Murdock and others to follow, the case is plainly different. Whatever Mr. Roosevelt may be thinking of doing with or about the insurgents, it must be conceded that he is showing great activity in getting at their point of view. And it will be noted that neither Cannon nor Aldrich nor Payne nor Tawney has yet called at Sagamore Hill. Possibly, the host there feels that he is already acquainted fully with their point of view. It is the novelty in his party with which he must make himself familiar—the springing up of a group of Republicans who may be compared with the Conscience Whigs or Come-outers.

AS TO COOLING HOUSES

From the New York Times.

Scientifically, refrigeration, even down to the point of absolute zero is as practicable as calorification, and a demand for "antistoves" would be sure to put a dozen kinds on the market the moment it was made known. Though most of us know summer heat to be no more unavoidable than winter cold, we have not yet escaped from the old habit of accepting it as something to be endured without any real effort at relief. Foreigners are inclined to jeer at Americans for making as much use of ice as we do, but though we cool our food and our drinks, very few of us have yet taken the next and very natural step of cooling our houses, shops and offices.

Whenever we choose, the thing can be done. It will cost something, but probably it would pay in increase of health as well as of comfort. The so-called temperate zone has a climate which consists of weather alternately tropic and arctic, and though New York never gets as cold as Greenland sometimes does, it has many a day hotter than any known to the West Indians.

The millionaire was searching his pockets for a dime; he said: "I'm going busted three-quarters of the time. I have my wealth invested in railways and in farms, in factories and foundries, and other fair alarms; while crowds of working people are drawing bones of mine, I'm sometimes sorely puzzled to cough up for a shine." When he had sprung this story, I wilted on the spot, and sat me down and muttered: "That's surely food for thought! I've always pictured rich men as salting scads away, and gloating o'er their riches, like fiends, by night and day. I've pictured them as owning fat diamonds by the pound; it seems they use their plunder to make the wheels go round. And if that money travels, and works, as money should, then what's the odds who owns it? It's surely doing good." I stepped around the corner to buy a cheap cigar, and found that rich man buying his sixteenth motor car.

The Daily Chit Chat

"I have always been excessively fond of driving," a woman who has just fulfilled her heart's desire by acquiring a horse, said to me the other day, "and always had so pitifully little of it. Several of my wealthier neighbors used to have carriages, but they took each other a great deal, and somehow I didn't get more than two or three drives in a summer. So now that I have a team I am going to try very hard to take the people who are fond of driving and don't get much of it. And another thing—there are never going to be any empty seats in my carriage. For years I have sat on my piazza beautiful afternoons and seen carriage after carriage go by with one or two empty seats, and it just used to seem wicked to me when I wanted so much to ride. So my carriage is always going to have just as much happiness in it as there is room for, even if I have to call people out of the highways and byways to fill up."

Do you know I think my friend by that speech stamped herself as an eminently successful woman.

For whatever his financial standing, whatever his attainments or achievements, it seems to me that any person has a right to be called a success, who has been able to pluck from his own deprivations and sufferings and misfortunes such an eager desire to have things different for other people.

"Give to establish a free lodging house not by a damn sight," stormed a rich old man to whom I had gone to ask for money for such a charity. "I guess people that haven't any place to sleep can do just about what I did when I was a boy, and came to town without a penny in my pocket—they can sleep in the park or walk the streets. Nobody gave me a free lodging or anything like it. I had to get out and hustle for a bed before I slept in it. I guess young people nowadays ain't changed so it'll hurt them to do the same."

He had plenty of money—that old curdmudgeon—but he certainly wasn't living a successful life.

The lady across the way is always doing something for some young girl who has no mother. She has three girls of her own to sew for and yet this spring she found time to make a pretty graduating gown for a motherless little friend of her daughters.

"Weren't you splendid?" I enthused. "How did you happen to do it?"

"Why, didn't you know," she explained most matter-of-factly, "that my mother and father died when I was just a little mite, and I had about as forlorn and pinched and loveless a childhood as anyone could? So, of course, when I find any girl without a father or mother I do anything I possibly can to make it different for her."

Which of these two is your attitude?

Which have you gotten from your deprivations and sufferings—bitterness and resentment or an eager desire to make it different for other people?

Yes, on reading that over I admit it sounds very much as if I fancied I were in a pulpit.

But considering what day it is maybe you'll excuse me.

Suggestive Questions on Sunday School Lesson

By Rev. Dr. Linscott for the International Newspaper Bible Study Club

Copy't, 1910, by Rev. T. S. Linscott, D. D.

July 17, 1910.

Peter's Confession. Matt. xvi: 13-28. Golden Text—Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. Matt. xvi: 16.

Verse 13—Did Jesus ask the question for information, or to draw them out, or for some other reason, as to whom men said he was?

How much care should we have as to what people think of us?

What did Jesus mean when he called himself "the son of man"?

Verse 14—What is the view of those who teach the transmigration of the soul, and did these people probably hold to that or some similar view?

Where is there any record in the Bible of people appearing after they were dead?

In what respects did Jesus resemble either John, or Elijah, or Jeremiah, or one of the prophets, to make the people think as they did?

Verses 15, 16—What was Peter's opinion as to who Jesus was?

What reason is there to believe that Peter did or did not, at this time, recognize Jesus as God himself?

Verse 17—How did Peter know that Jesus was the Christ?

Is there enough evidence to prove beyond doubt that Jesus is the Christ, apart from such a personal revelation as Peter had? (See I Cor. xii: 3). Give your reasons.

If the knowledge that Jesus is the Christ comes by personal revelation, then is there any evidence that the devout heathen, who have never heard the gospel story, ever get such a revelation, or anything like it?

Would, or could, God have revealed the Christ to Peter, if Peter had not the evidence that the life and work of Jesus afforded?

Verses 18, 19—What, according to Jesus, is the rock upon which God builds his church?

What is the Christian church?

What is the chief or central thought, or foundation stone of Christianity?

Suppose we did not know, or were to lose everything else, but the fact of God, by his spirit, revealing unto us Christ as the Son of the living God, how much vital truth should we lack?

What are the evidences that the Christian church is the mightiest force on the earth, and that it will finally conquer the world? (This question must be answered in writing by members of the club).

What is the purpose of a key? and what did the key of the kingdom of heaven mean?

Jesus gave Peter the keys of the kingdom of heaven, but what reason is there to believe that every person, with like spiritual insight as Peter, also possesses these keys?

Verse 20—Why did Jesus forbid them to tell the people that He was the Christ?

What is the difference, in the degree of merit, between those who refrain from preaching Christ, when God forbids, and those who preach Him when God bids them?

Verse 21—When did Jesus first realise that the Jews would reject and put him to death?

Did Jesus offer Himself to the Jews, in good faith, hoping they would receive Him, and could they have done so, had they been so minded? Give your reasons.

Verses 22, 23—Was Peter's reasoning in harmony with common sense, and was his rebuke of Jesus prompted by pure motives?

What was Peter's real error?

What reason is there to believe that a good man may get divine guidance on some things, and then, unwittingly, protect his own reasoning into other things?

Verses 24-28 Which brings the greater good even in good things, and why, self-denial, or self-gratification?

What is the sum total of all things, in which are all good things, for time and eternity?

PATRIOTIC, UNDER THE CIRCUMSTANCES

From the Philadelphia Times.

There was one patriot, at least, in Philadelphia who remembered the significance of the Fourth, and he was a negro.

This man, probably 60 years old, was seated upon his doorstep in one of the side streets of West Philadelphia, on Monday evening about 7 o'clock, when a white man for whom the old negro frequently does odd jobs strolled by the house.

"Well, Eph," said the white man, "what did you think of the fight?"

He referred, of course, to the Jeffries-Johnson bowl.

The eyes of the old negro lighted up in a second with the fires of youthful enthusiasm.

"Gosh, boss," he answered, "we done sutinly knock de spots offen dem Britishers, didn't we?"

TODAY IN HISTORY

Charlotte Corday Guillotined July 17.

During the French Revolution, among those who had placed faith in the Girondists and their ideals, was a young woman of noble birth of Normandy, Charlotte Corday. When the mob of Paris rose and drove with insult from the convention those who, in her eyes, were the heroic defenders of the universal principles of truth and justice, she bitterly resented the wrong that had been done, not only to the men themselves, but to that France of which she regarded them as the true representatives.

Owing to Marat's persistent cry for a dictatorship and for shedding of blood, it was he who, in the departments, was accounted especially responsible both for the expulsion of the Girondists and for the tyranny which now began to weigh as heavily upon the whole country as it had long weighed upon the capital.

Incapable as all then were of comprehending the causes which had brought about the fall of the Girondists, Charlotte Corday imagined that, by putting an end to this man's life, he could also put an end to the system of government which he advocated. Informing her friends that she wished to visit England, she left Caen and traveled in the diligence to Paris. On her arrival she purchased a knife, and afterwards obtained entrance into Marat's house on the pretext that she brought news which she desired to communicate to him. She knew that he would be eager to obtain intelligence of the movements of the Girondist deputies still in Normandy.

Marat was ill at the time, and in a bath when Charlotte Corday was admitted. She gave him the names of the deputies who were at Caen. "In a few days," he said, as he wrote them hastily down, "I will have them all guillotined in Paris."

As she heard these words she plunged the knife into his body and killed him on the spot. The cry uttered by the murdered man was heard, and Charlotte, who did not attempt to escape, was captured and conveyed to prison amid the murmurs of an angry mob. It had been, from the first, her intention to sacrifice her life for the cause of her country, and glorified in her deed, she met death with stoical indifference.

"I killed one man," she said, when brought before the revolutionary court, "in order to save the lives of 100,000 others."

Marat's murder brought about contrary results to those which the woman who ignorantly and rashly had flung away her life hoped by the sacrifice to effect. Marat was regarded as a martyr by no small portion of the working population of Paris. His murder excited indignation beyond the comparatively narrow circle of those who took an active part in political life, while at the same time it added a new impulse to the growing cry for blood.

It is difficult to analyse the character of Charlotte Corday, we know so little of it; but there was in it much that was noble and exalted. Her mind had been formed by her studies on a pagan type. To Barbaroux and the Girondins of Caen she wrote from her prison, anticipating happiness "with Brutus in the Elysian Fields," after her death, and with this latter she sent a simple loving farewell to her father, revealing a tender side to her character that otherwise we would hardly have looked for in such a woman. It was on July 15, 1793, Charlotte Corday killed Marat, and she was guillotined on July 17.

She is said to have preserved her calmness to the last, except a momentary shudder when she saw the guillotine. She recovered herself immediately, and placed herself in position under the fatal blade without assistance from anyone.

July 17 is the date of the battle of Killicrankie in 1689; of the starting of London "Punch" in 1841; of the first successful experiment in stellar photograph in 1850, and the beginning of the Franco-Prussian war in 1870. It is the birthday of Dr. Isaac Watts (1674); of Elbridge Gerry, vice president under Madison, and who is responsible for the word "Gerrymander" (1744); Thomas Pickering, secretary of state under Washington (1745); John Jacob Astor, founder of the Astor family in America (1763), and Martin F. Tupper, the English poet (1810). It is the date of the death of the Second Earl Grey, prime minister of England, in 1845.

Tombs of the Mogul Emperors

By Walter S. Ashby.

The next town upon our route was Lucknow, famous for the siege of the Residency during the mutiny of 1857. The English people seem to feel that they have the sole right to be thrilled at Lucknow. I cannot see how any man, woman, or child can visit the ruins of the Residency and hear the particulars of the siege and have the historic spots pointed out and the actions described without experiencing a thrill of patriotic enthusiasm. Of course the English take a more vital interest, but Lucknow to us proved to be one of the enjoyable cities of India.

During the Indian mutiny, the Residency, commanding anything but a strong position, was held by 900 British troops, 150 volunteers, 700 noncombatant natives, and 800 women and children, against 80,000 natives for nearly five months during which time they were partially relieved three months after the commencement of the siege. Of the 2,500 hundred people who held the Residency less than a third were living when the siege was broken.

The Residency consisted of a small colony the buildings of which are now in various stages of ruin. In some places the buildings are outlined by low walls of brick from one to three feet high. The Residency building with one or two near it have still sufficient of their walls standing to give a good idea of their original appearance. All the buildings were constructed of the small sun-baked bricks so common in India and the walls in most instances are nearly two feet thick.

The Residency is entered by the Baillie gate, which even in its present state of dilapidation is an imposing entrance. Not a square foot of its surface is without bullet or cannonball holes. A large bougenvillea vine is doing its best to hide the scars of battle beneath its beautiful purple flowers and luxuriant foliage. The guide stops you at the gate to explain the position of the native forces and the route by which the relief force came. The beautiful, well kept grounds which may be seen through the gate do not suggest the awful experience that the small force of defenders went through.

Monuments to Heroes.

Passing through the gate we came upon one of the many monuments erected to the brave men and women who held out against hope. This first monument marks the location of one of the few field guns within the residency and is erected in memory of a brave officer who operated the gun for 87 days before being killed by the enemy. From this point it is one story of heroism after another with the location of each deed recorded on stone set into the wall or by a monument erected on the spot. A guide who had been one of the defenders told his story with fine dramatic effect and accurately described and pointed out every point of attack and its result.

The buildings of the residency, surrounded by beautiful trees and carefully tended lawns have that dignity even in decay that is characteristic of all noble ruins, nor are they without a certain beauty. Certainly no more fitting monument to the gallant defenders could be conceived than these shell-pierced bullet-scarred ruins in which they suffered so keenly the merciless Indian sun and lack of food and water adding more to the lists of sick and dying than the bullets of the enemy. If would be a callous man indeed who was not thrilled at seeing the Residency and hearing its story.

The Wells of Cawnpore.

...ing Lucknow we want to Cawnpore, also interesting for its part in the mutiny. Here only the wells are outlined and a few brick posts mark the location of the various buildings which were held. The siege at Cawnpore was of short duration as the small force, that was almost unprotected from the heat and insufficiently supplied with ammunition. Practically every person was lost owing to treachery on the part of the natives, who promised to release the few remaining people when the garrison surrendered. Putting them on two large boats the native commander commanded the boats to be set adrift upon the river. Almost immediately the boats were grounded, when the natives lined up on the shore opened fire with deadly effect. Women and children, however, were spared until later, when they too, were massacred and their bodies thrown into a well and buried.

There are two wells in Cawnpore each of which furnished a grave for 200 or more people. Monuments erected over them tell their sad story. Though the results at Cawnpore were more tragic the same interest is not aroused, owing possibly to the lack of buildings and other evidences of the fight.

About three hundred years ago the last of five generations of builders completed the most beautiful building in the world, the Taj Mahal. Before visiting this architectural masterpiece a person should visit the buildings erected by the former generations and thus prepare himself for this veritable gem. The same general plan of surrounding grounds is noticeable in all these buildings. Symmetry amounted to a mania with these people in the building of tombs or temples. The grounds in every instance being surrounded by high walls which form a perfect square. In the center of each side these walls are pierced by gates the main gate having a counterpart in the opposite wall with two smaller gates exactly alike in the side walls. From these gates lead paths of more or less elaborate design to the building which is placed in the center of the square.

Tombs of Mogul Emperors.

Some of the most beautiful buildings of the earlier kings are located at some distance from Delhi and Agra, but there are enough examples near Delhi to show the progress made by the successive generations.

Babar, the first of the Mogul emperors, had his task in conquering the country and establishing the empire. His successor Humayun left a splendid tomb which while not so graceful in outline or exhibiting such delicate workmanship as the later buildings is a wonderful piece of architecture. The material used is chiefly red sandstone which is trimmed in white marble. The tomb consists of a huge building constructed entirely of stone, square in shape with cut off corners, and in the center rises a huge dome of graceful proportions. The interior is divided into one large central room whose high ceiling is the interior of the center dome. Beneath this lit the bodies of Humayusa and his wife. At the four corners are smaller rooms in which are the bodies of his family.

In each side, allowing a splendid view of the approach and its gate is an immense arch, so that by standing in the center of the center room one may turn slowly about and see each of the four gates. In Humayun's tomb a maze of passages and stairways leads to the roof from which a splendid view of the ruins of Delhi may be had. Delhi, which had been the capital for several centuries, has been destroyed and rebuilt seven times. Each time the city has been moved just north of its preceding site so that one may drive to the first ruin and trace the ups and downs of Delhi—fifteen miles of ruin in which one cannot help being impressed by the gigantic undertakings of these remarkable people. The few buildings which still remain intact show the enormity of their early ideas. Mosques, towers and tombs are built entirely of stone and of sufficient size to make them momentous undertakings even in these days of mechanical assistance. Each successive city discarded the buildings of its predecessor and commenced anew buildings which should be more wonderful.

One ruined fort now houses an entire village each room to spare for a huge mosque and observatory. The walls of this fort must be nearly fifty feet in height and are of solid masonry 20 feet in thickness. To pass through the ruins of Delhi and see detached piles of masonry which were once parts of immense buildings reminds one more of a volcanic upheaval than the work of men.

Tomb of Akbar.

To follow the efforts of this remarkable family one should next see the tomb of Akbar, which is at Sikandra five miles from Agra. Akbar was the son of Humayun and it was he who perfected the code of laws of the Mogul empire and constructed some of its wonderful buildings. His tomb at Sikandra is set in a park two miles in circumference which is entered by a huge gate of red sandstone in which are inlaid panels of marble in white, gray, yellow, black and red in various designs. So cunningly proportioned are these immense buildings and their decorations that one's sense of proportion is led far astray. From the four corners of this gate, which is a wonderful building in itself, rise four white marble minarets from the tops of which one gets a splendid view of the surrounding country. Between two rows of splendid trees a broad avenue of stone leads to the tomb. In the center of the avenue and running its entire length is a shallow depression filled with water which reflects the trees and buildings and adds much to the pleasing effect.

The tomb consists of a four storied structure, the three lower stories of red sandstone, the top one of white marble. The first story is 320 feet square and each succeeding story is much smaller, allowing wide verandas about the upper stories and giving a pyramidal effect to the entire building.

The entrance at the lower story leads through marble grilles of remarkable delicacy to a low dome-ceilinged anteroom decorated in beautiful Persian designs. The British government has attempted to show the former glory of this room by having portions of the walls restored to what the artist thought to be their original colors, with the result that the room now has a patchy appearance. The old work even in its faded condition is far more beautiful than the new. The remarkable qualities of the ancient pigments are clearly seen in comparing the old and new work. The original painting done some three hundred years ago has faded evenly and retained its beauty, while the new part finished less than five years is already fading and becoming tarnished. One color in particular is remarkable, a beautiful blue which, though exposed to the weather, tropical sun and torrential rains for 300 years still retains its original brilliance and beauty.

From the anteroom a long, low vaulted passage leads at a gentle incline to the tombs of Akbar and his wife which lie beneath an immense dome which was originally lighted by four windows high in the walls so arranged that the tombs were in a soft diffused light. The improvements of the government in this case consisted in closing three of the windows so that the one remaining window now casts its light upon the opposite wall and leaves the tombs in darkness.

Ascending to the second story one may walk about a broad uncovered veranda which has small dome roofed pavilions in the center of each of its four sides which in the time of Akbar sheltered musicians. From this veranda one may see each of the gates in the four walls. The one opposite the main entrance was partially destroyed by lightning, and the contractor's estimate for restoring it was $100,000, from which one may get an idea of the character of these buildings.

Delicate Stone Grilles.

At the four corners of the second story are double domes each in a different design of brilliant colors executed in a sort of tile. At every opportunity sandstone grilles have been used and so frequent are they that one fails to notice them, yet each one must have meant days and days of patient labor at the hands of skilled workmen.

To crown this splendid building the upper story is of white marble, the walls formed of screens of marble grilles of lacelike quality. These grilles are made of slabs of marble two to four inches in thickness pierced with innumerable openings forming intricate patterns, and the work is of the finest and must have required the utmost skill and care. So light and delicate in appearance are the that a person hesitates to touch them for fear of breaking them. In the center of this inclosure, exactly over the real tombs are two duplicate tombs exposed to the open air. In the one for Akbar one may see the place which held the famous Kohinoor diamond. It was taken from here by Shah Jehan grandson of Akbar, for his wife, taken from her by the Persian king for the famous peacock throne and from him taken by a Hindu king to a palace at Lahore, and from there taken by Lord Lawrence and presented to Queen Victoria.

Work of the Vandals.

Around the outer wall of Akbar's tomb are many places which have been hacked and scarred by Hindus who removed the gold with which the walls were inlaid. To see the grandeur and luxuriousness of the buildings of these ancient kings one feels that the reckless extravagance of the present day is very tame indeed and does not deserve the attention it is receiving.

Akbar also constructed the greater part of the fort at Agra which is an immense inclosure of red sandstone situated upon the banks of the Jumna river. The walls of the fort are 70 feet in height and are massive in the extreme. A deep moat over a mile in length surrounds the walls. The entrance over a draw bridge through huge spiked gates and the long passage through the thick walls is very impressive.

Within the fort are some remarkable buildings, the first one we visited being the famous pearl mosque, court and colonnade are all of dazzling white marble. A square arab court with a fountain in the center for the performance of ablutions is surrounded on three sides by a covered gallery opening on the court through a series of Saracenic arches. This gallery is pierced in the center of each side by a gate, one of which was used for the kings, one for the nobility and one for the public. The fourth side of the court is faced by a beautiful colonnade of pure Saracenic architecture, which is seven arches wide and three arches deep. The floor is inlaid in marble outlines to represent the Mohammedan prayer rugs. To the left is a small room used by the ladies of the palace. Surmounting the colonnade are three splendid domes of white marble, the center one being larger than the two flanking ones.

The effect of the pearl mosque is indescribably cool and beautiful and a more ideal place in which to meditate and worship would be difficult to imagine.

From the mosque we next went to the hall of public audience which is similar in design to the colonnade of the pearl mosque, being a series of arches, of real sandstone which at the time of Lord Curzon's visit was whitewashed by the government. In many places in the Agra fort the governmental whitewash brush has destroyed much of the original beauty of the various rooms.

Varied Types.

Akbar, while a Mohammedan, was not strongly prejudiced against other forms of religion, evidenced by the fact that he took to himself wives of all religions and decorated their apartments in the style of architecture characteristic of their beliefs. One may therefore stroll through the ladies' apartments and find representative specimens of all types of architecture then in use, all marked by a conscientious adherence to detail and the most skillful workmanship.

Our guide, Karam Illahi, representing the third generation of a family of Agra guides, not only possessed an intimate knowledge of the fort and its history, but a rare artistic sense as well, and it was through this knowledge that we were enabled to see many beautiful bits of decoration passed unnoticed by the less competent guides. The pleasure of our visit to Agra fort was doubled by the efforts of Kram Illahi. One series of columns of Hindu-Pavi architecture were especially fine. Made from a brown stone, each pillar carved in a different design and a separate design on each side of each pillar, the work was so perfectly done and the designs so intricate that they lost all resemblance to stone and had the appearance of beautifully carved woodwork.

The apartments of the favorite queen were most wonderful; these were partly the work of Akbar and partly the work of Shah Jehan, his grandson, all in wonderful white marble with floral designs of exquisite beauty and delicacy inlaid in natural colors and with various precious and semiprecious stones. It is said of the mogul emperors that "They built like Titans and finished like jewelers." Certainly the most finished workmen could make no criticism of either design or workmanship. That at the expense of infinite patience and skill have been brought designs that would be difficult to handle in far more tractable materials. There are sprays of flowers inlaid with absolute perfection with stems, leaves and flower petals in natural colors formed of jade, jasper, varicolored marbles, carnelian, lapis-lazuli, malachite and emerald. Nor is such decoration applied sparingly for floors, walls and ceilings of numerous large rooms and halls are covered with various designs. In one of these rooms is a rectangular depression in one of the floors elaborately carved and inlaid. This was the queen's bath and from four openings in its sides spouted water scented with rose leaves. Beyond this is a narrow incline inlaid with colored marbles to represent a cascade and which must have been very beautiful with water flowing over it.

Jewel Room in the Wall.

An octagonal room of wonderful beauty was built so that a portion of it extended beyond the face of the wall 70 feet above the ground, from which a splendid view of the Taj Mahal and the surrounding country may be had. In this room are the jewel boxes, holes in the wall [illegible] in which [illegible] deposited their jewels for safe keeping. History has it that they are too small for a man's hand to enter and bring out the jewels. Several which I tried admitted the passage of my clinched fist and I could easily have removed any jewels which they might have contained. They evidently had bigger men in those days.

Surrounding the court here are beautiful pierced marble screens of wonderful design through which the court ladies might watch the elephant and tiger fights in the yard below without exposing themselves to view. The king and the balance of his court could see the contests from a large stone platform overhanging the arena.

Those of the court who did not care for such strenuous sport might fish in a huge tank of stone some 15 feet deep and a hundred or more feet square. This is surrounded by wide stone pavements on which front covered verandas.

The Gem mosque is a dainty building in white marble for the king's exclusive use. Like the Pearl mosque it has three domes of white marble but the court and mosque are quite small compared to the larger buildings within the fort inclosure. Here the king was accustomed to worship in solitude. It is truly a gem and well worthy of the name bestowed upon it, recalling as it does much of the oriental splendor of these remarkable buildings, the wonders of the Arabian Nights in the mirror palace. Here small pieces of convex mirrors have been inlaid in the walls, floor and ceilings to form designs which almost entirely cover every available space. Cascades of falling water trickled over steps beneath which were placed hundreds of lights. The effect of the light shining through the drops of water must have resembled a shower of gems, while the [illegible] of a single light in the [illegible] mirrors gives one a faint idea of what a veritable fairy palace it must have been when glittering in the light of the numerous lamps it must have contained.

BE KIND TO YOUR BOOKS

From the Kansas City Star.

Here is something every boy and girl should learn while young. A book lover handles a volume as something too precious to maltreat, and it causes to such a genuine pang to see the careless way in which the person brought up without the refining influences of books in the home sometimes handles and destroys masterpieces of the bookbinder's art.

"Are there any trout out there?" asked one friend.

"Thousands of 'em," replied Mr. Warry.

"Will they bite readily?" asked another friend.

"Will they?" said Mr. Warry. "Why, they're absolutely [illegible]. A man can [illegible] your pockets and bring white [illegible] telling you the [illegible]"

Hold the book with its back on a smooth or covered table. Let the front board down, then the other, holding the leaves in one hand, while you open a few leaves at the back, then a few at the front and so on, alternately opening back and front, gently pressing open the sections till you reach the center of the volume. Do this two or three times and you will obtain the best results. Open the volume violently or carelessly in any place and you will break the back and cause a start in the leaves. Never force the back of the book.

It would seem hardly necessary to warn anyone against the manifest impropriety of turning down leaves to mark a place, of pencilling perfectly inane comments on the margin of certain passages or to dampen the fingers in the mouth when turning leaves. If such sacrilege were not so common. Every teacher and every librarian has to combat these careless and annoying habits which should have been corrected at home.

HIS AWED LISTENERS.

From Lippincott's.

An English scientist was in the habit of taking hunting trips in the north of Scotland. Here, when night came upon them and he and his guides were sitting around their camp he would become very communicative on scientific marvels, even narrating to his seemingly awed listeners things that he never confided to his colleagues at home.

One night the distinguished Englishman paused in his talk, and turning to one of his guides asked curiously:

"[illegible] you [illegible] your companions [illegible] out of your pockets and [illegible] while I'm telling you the [illegible]"

"Eh, sir?" [illegible]

THE STODDARD LIBRARY

Countless friends of John L. Stoddard have been waiting for years for the appearance of his second great work. Now that the work is happily completed its scope constitutes a sufficient reason for the delay in its appearance. One of our greatest educators having been asked the question, "What is the best book that can possibly be published?" replied: "A book giving the greatest writers of the world, with the best things they have written. The selection from each writer in such a book must be complete in itself and every selection of genuine interest."

In his latest and last work Mr. Stoddard has carried out exactly the suggestion of the educator above mentioned. He has devoted his whole life to the success of this work, namely, selection, and the selection only of that which is intensely interesting. In the "Stoddard Lectures" he chose for us only the most beautiful and most interesting subjects in the field of travel. In the "Stoddard Library" he gives the greatest, most beautiful and most interesting things that have been written by the most brilliant writers of the world from the beginning of literature to the present time; and the selection of each writer is complete in itself.

During his 40 years of travel Mr. Stoddard, having in view the preparation of this great work, called on the great contemporary writers and literary critics. Even to attempt to point out all the excellent features of these 12 volumes would require columns of space. One feature, however, we cannot refrain from mentioning specifically—that is, the excellence of the illustrations. They show either the home of some great author or some place associated with the world's great literary celebrities. The 97 full-page illustrations are all reproduced from watercolors painted by Buhler. The aim of the author to produce a fitting companion to the "Lectures" has been successfully carried out.

"MORNING STAR"

"Morning Star," by H. Rider Haggard. Longmans, Green & Co., publishers. Price, $1.50.

In his latest novel Mr. Rider Haggard has drawn aside the veil of time, and revealed to us the mysteries and black magic of the old Egyptians. Tua, or Morning Star, the daughter of Pharaoh, is the heroine. She is a girl of great beauty, and the story of her love for Rames, and the perils she goes through for his sake, is one of the most entrancing Mr. Rider Haggard has written. How great a part miracles of the most terrible and exalted kind played in the life of old Egypt, the reader need go no further than the Book of Exodus to learn. Records of them are to be found in countless monuments and writings, and from the coffins of their priests we still recover wands such as the wizards threw down before Pharaoh. In this tale these wizards appear wielding the powers of the good and evil gods as they were believed to do by the old Egyptians.

"THE CROWDS AND THE VEILED WOMAN"

"The Crowds and the Veiled Woman," by Marian Cox. Funk & Wagnalls, publishers, New York. Price, $1.50.

A romance of the intellect with a mystical symbolistic theme, written in brilliant epigrammatic style. It presents a new psychology of love, remarkable in its scientific analysis and poetical interpretation. While modern American literature is being so often criticized as commonplace, mediocre, trivial, this book should command recognition from all lovers of art as a literary achievement, artistic and novel in construction, startling and original in philosophy.

OUIDA'S STORIES FOR CHILDREN

"A Dog of Flanders," by Ouida. The J. B. Lippincott company, publishers, Philadelphia. Price, $1.50.

Four of the best of the children's tales of Ouida—the late Louise de la Ramee have been issued in an attractive volume within the long title, "A Dog of Flanders, the Nurnberg Stove and Other Stories," with eight excellent pictures in colors by Maria L. Kirk. The covers and lining papers also are decorated with windmills and cunning little Dutch children in wooden shoes. The stories are very human and essentially true tales of Dutch, German, Italian and English children, and, though told in a rather "grown-up" vocabulary, will be enjoyed by children of almost any age. The volume belongs to the same series of juvenile classics in which three of George Macdonald's stories have been issued in preceding years.

"MR. CARTERET"

"Mr. Carteret and Others," by David Gray. The Century company, publishers, New York. Whitney & Grimwood, Colorado Springs. Price, $1 net.

All of these short stories have been printed in magazine form, four of them dealing with Mr. Carteret and the other two touching other careers. "Mr. Carteret and His Fellow Americans Abroad" is a diverting bit of description, presenting the quaint adventures of a party of American Indian rough riders as they took part in an English fox hunt.

"MIGHTY HUNTERS"

"Mighty Hunters," by Ashmore Russan. Longmans, Green & Co., publishers. Price, $1.35 net.

A certain mighty hunter, an Englishman named Carson, dwells on a coffee plantation in the Department of Soconusco, near the Gautemalan frontier of Mexico on the slopes of the Tacana volcano, to be exact. Mr. Carson, El Cazador Grande, is a remarkable person in more ways than one. He is one of those dead shots, in the first place, who are so rarely met with outside the pages of juvenile fiction—one who can score infallible bull's eyes in endless succession at impossible ranges with miraculous rifles of English manufacture. He enjoys spending a night now and then standing up to his waist in the stagnant waters of a tropical swamp infested with alligators and mosquitoes near a drinking place frequented by tigers, leons, tigercats, coyotes, and no doubt an occasional forest wolf. These he is accustomed to shoot by the light of a small electric lamp in his hat band operated by the familiar vest-pocket dry battery a pastime which his remarkable nocturnal sight, infallible marksmanship and arsenal of (English made) repeating rifles render quite safe. It was here that he was attacked by a gigantic anaconda 32 feet in length by two feet one inch in circumference, which was killed in an under-water battle in the dark lasting about one minute, by a lucky blow of the machete. Indeed, it is a remarkable yarn, and if young America can decipher the obscure Anglicisms and gratuitous Spanish of "Mighty Hunters" he stands a first-rate chance of becoming aware of the superiority of those (English made) repeating rifles, so to say.

"HAPPY ISLAND"

"Happy Island," by Jennette Lee. The Century company, publishers, New York. Whitney & Grimwood, Colorado Springs. Price, $1.

There really is a "Happy Island," though it has another name on the map of the Nova Scotia coast, and the world is happier for the story of "Uncle William," "most lovable and inspiring of do-nothings," and his life there. "There are not many men happier than you are, William," Benjy tells him in delightful pages of "Happy Island." "No, I suppose they ain't," smiles Uncle William. "Sometimes I wake up in the night and think how happy I am seems kind o' shiftless. Like enough, I ought to be out hustling for sunthin'—but I do' 'no' what 'twd be." "The' 's suthin' about it suthin' about the way the tides come in and the sun goes down and the stars come out—that makes you feel glad." The picturesque simplicity, the quaint charm, the mellow humor, the tender heart appeal, which made Mrs. Lee's earlier book so fine a success, in the best meaning of the word, are even more strongly marked in this new narrative.

"THE WILD OLIVE"

"The Wild Olive," by the author of "The Inner Shrine." Harper & Brothers, publishers, New York. Whitney & Grimwood, Colorado Springs. Price, $1.50.

"The Wild Olive" is a story in a new setting, a story that grips the reader from the first chapter—a story of great vigor and charm. The scene opens in the Adirondack wilderness, with a fugitive from justice, young and a gentleman, running through the woods at night. Looking through a cottage window, he recognizes the judge who condemned him—innocent—for murder. A girl's form outside beckons him to follow. She leads him to a shack and there provides him with shelter, food and safety during the days he is pursued. The girl is the judge's ward, whose youth has been shadowed by a strain upon her birth—hence her sympathy for an outcast. The story rushes on, carrying the youth into rehabilitated manhood and the girl to the height of emotional sacrifice and triumph. As a serial in Harper's Magazine "The Wild Olive" has called forth an unusual number of letters written in terms of almost extravagant praise and delighted interest. The book contains many diverting incidents of the story not permitted by the exigencies of serial publication. It is, above all, a straight human story, unbroken in suspense, bright with dialogue, tense with emotion. The title is quoted from St. Paul—"And thou, being a wild olive tree" an allusion to the heroine's origin, which places her, a growth of nature, apart from the cultivated trees of the orchard—society.

"THE CITY OF SIX"

"The City of Six," by C. L. Canfield. A. C. McClurg & Co., publishers, Chicago. Price, $1.50.

Chauncey L. Canfield passed away last November, before the first proofs of his novel, "The City of Six," had reached him. Having spent most of his life in the west, the author was well acquainted with his field, and his descriptions of mining towns and the lives of their citizens are done with the accuracy of actual experience. The City of Six, otherwise San Francisco, was so named from the number of its first inhabitants. The most engaging of the lot is Rance Poole, a youth who, though accustomed to luxury in his Mississippi home, is playing the necessary but commonplace role of camp cook. Later he enjoys the distinction of having discovered the giant nugget, a delightful lump of wealth whose value is some $14,000. The romantic, as well as some of the tragic incidents, are furnished by the arrival of the wife and daughter of one of the pioneers, and with no attempt to induce thrills, the tale reads like a relation of real happenings.

MAKERS OF SORROW AND JOY

"Makers of Sorrow and Makers of Joy," by Dora Melegari. Funk & Wagnalls, publishers, New York. Price, $1.35 net.

"Makers of Sorrow and Makers of Joy," although first published only a few years ago, has already "had a great sale on the continent." The work has been aptly described as one "for serious readers and others who earnestly desire to do right, and are willing for this purpose to make a subjective study of their own emotions and motives." Its theme is that what have commonly been considered as slight individual faults and habits of thought and feeling such as vanity, jealousy, impatience, deceit, uncharitableness in judgment, etc. should really be adjudged by public opinion as offenses that are criminal in their nature, inasmuch as the effects they produce are extremely damaging to character and social well-being. Carried to excess, they may lead even to suicide and death.

The author illuminates her theme and gives practical suggestions for self-improvement.

REALLY FUNNY

"The Big Strike at Siwash," by George Fitch. Doubleday, Page & Co., publishers, New York. Price, 50 cents.

"The Big Strike at Siwash," George Fitch's lively, amusing little tale of the freshwater college never suffering a football defeat for seven years, and wonderful Ole Skjarsen, who renders possible this proud record, is one of those laughter machines that must be set in motion to be appreciated. Ole comes from the Wisconsin lumber camps at the best of Bost, the marvelous coach, "taken away from Hambletonian college for $5,000 a year and eat with the faculty," and all goes merry as a marriage bell until Ole, just one the eve of a big game, decides that "I ent play futball des yar" and starts in to earn a degree. It turns out that Ole's price is to "make a fraternity," and that he is eager for the other boys to "rush" him. And that's all that it's fair to tell of a story warranted to make any but a wild Indian or a graven image roar.

LITERARY ESSAYS

"The Excursions of a Book Lover," by Frederick Rowland Marvin. Sherman, French & Co., publishers, Boston. Price, $1.50 net.

The charm of a genial mood radiates here, the mood of a cultured personality opening out in mellow talkative hours. Unmindful, in this instance, at least, of the dull mechanics of composition, the author, in vagrant, happy way, touches here and there upon the lighter literary themes. A soliloquy on books, made in the fashion of an ardent booklover's apostrophe, a charming story about an old-time bibliophile, perhaps the first of book collectors; a view of literary fame, an amusing and significant collection of book dedications, a keen review of Lombroso's "Man of Genius" are among the themes that fill these golden hours. The whole manner of the man, in his happy comradeship with his audience and in his attitude toward literature and the life out of which it springs, makes of this book a delicate, epicurean literary refreshment.

"TWO LOVERS"

"Two Lovers," by George Eliot. Illustrated in color by Howard Chandler Christy. Moffat, Yard & Co., publishers, New York. Price, $1 net.

Comparatively few people, perhaps, know that the great novelist ever wrote poems, while many will smile sympathetically to remember that the few rhymed productions she left all were written in the glow and heyday of her own love dream—between the first fruits of success, as earned by "Adam Bede," "The Mill on the Floss," "Silas Marner" and "Romola" and the still more radiant glory of "Middlemarch" and "Daniel Deronda." It was the writer's own joyous epithalamium, this particular lyric, even if, as we now know, the fairy predictions did not all "come true."

Howard Chandler Christy has made eight lovely and characteristic color illustrations to the poem, one for each period suggested by the tender stanzas. And if he now and then errs, as when he depicts the mother whose children all have felt "that lonely pain," herself and the beloved husband, young looking as one of her own daughters, well, this, after all, is a forgivable fault. The book is beautifully bound in white and green, with picture cover, while the delicate page decorations, also in dreamy, springlike green, add further beauty.

Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets gently stimulate the liver and bowels to expel poisonous matter, cleanse the system, cure constipation and sick headache. Sold by all dealers.

GARDEN WORK AN AID TO BEAUTY

From the New York Press.

Working in the garden and picking flowers make gentle exercise that tends to improve the figure. Many society women believe this, and on Long Island there are said to be a score of society women who are resorting to this treatment for health and elasticity. Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont spends much time in her garden in Southampton. Mrs. Herbert M. Harriman and many others say they delight to pick flowers, and the question has been raised whether they are not following the advice of a beauty specialist who advises this for health and the form. "If a woman is in earnest about becoming slim," says the beauty doctor, "she will use the same muscles in working over a flower bed as she will in exercising in a gymnasium. Weeding seems prosaic, but it is excellent exercise. One of my patients came to me recently and said she wished to develop her arms and her shoulders. I told her to go home and run the lawn mower. She was startled at first, but finally she followed my advice and it did her a world of good."

S.S.S. CURES RHEUMATISM

No case of Rheumatism was ever cured except by a thorough purification of the blood; just as long as the blood remains charged with fermenting uric acid poison the painful disease will continue. The pains and aches of Rheumatism are only symptoms, and it is true these may be scattered and temporarily relieved by the application of plasters, liniments and home remedies of various kinds, but the person who trifles with this dangerous disease by depending on local treatment alone is bound to pay for the neglect with constant suffering, later on. S. S. S. cures Rheumatism in the only way it is possible to cure the disease. It goes down into the blood and removes the uric acid from the circulation, so that the nerves, bones, muscles and joints are all lubricated and fed with nourishing matter, instead of being continually irritated and inflamed with the sharp, gritty impurity. When S. S. S. has cleansed and purified the blood the pains and aches cease, all inflammation disappears, stiffened muscles are made supple, and every miserable symptom of Rheumatism is corrected. Book on Rheumatism and any medical advice free to all who write.

THE MANICURE LADY

Her Notions on the Month of June.

"Well, George," said the Manicure Lady. "I'm mighty glad shes June has went away and found me still a respectable lady."

"Most girls of your age would be kind of sorry in such a case," said the Head Barber.

"I don't know what you mean that for," said the Manicure Lady in her most frapped voice. I ain't anywhere the old dame you say I is to figure me I don't think a girl of 24 ought to be flung a spinster."

"Neither do I," said the Head Barber. "A girl of 24 is a very young girl. My wife was 26 when I married her."

"She was old enough to have better sense," said the Manicure Lady. "But anyhow, I'm glad June has went.

A Great June This

"There has been a great June, too. Lots of things has happened. Roosevelt has came back, and Jeff has caught about 2,200,000 trout, Johnson has ate about that many chickens. Cook not

He calls her a "star-eyed mystery." Others call her a "moon-face."

Gillett stopped the big fight, a prominent society lady got pinched up at the Casino in Central park, that great place for pinching, and we have had a regular major league murder to talk about.

"But June never appealed much to me, George. When most folks think of June they think of brides and roses and all that bunk, but I guess I'm a different sort of a girl.

"Up to our house it was certainly a fierce month. The old gent kind of felt himself slipping on the buttermilk diet he started the last part of May, and when father slips he lights hard enough to make a star in the ice. Some poet fellow wrote something about being knee deep in June, but he didn't have much on the old gent, who has been over his head most of the time.

"And brother Wilfred is having another of his foolish streaks lately. All of last month he was writing June poetry about a girl that lives in the next apartment. Wilfred hasn't met her, and he calls her his star-eyed mystery. Poets is different than most of us, I reckon, because she looks more moon-faced than star-eyed to me, but poor Wilfred is hooked up for fair, and has spoiled a lot of my best stationery writing sonnets to her and then crying over them and tearing them up.

"The old gent certainly gets Wilfred's goat. He told the poor boy the other day that nobody ever won a lady by writing verses and then tearing them up. He even offered to introduce himself to her and then frame it up for Wilfred, but that only made brother mad as a wildcat. Here is one of the verses he tore up:

"'Ah, strange, slim goddess with the eyes of flame,
Like rain into my parched life you came.
Lofty my love, loftier than a steeple,
I wish that I could meet you and your people.'

"I don't blame him for tearing it up," said the Head Barber. "It sounds like some of them lines they used to put on shaving mugs, like 'Always Remember Me.' I used to think that it would be a cinch for a poet to win any girl he wanted, but the only fellow I know that is a good verse writer weighs near 300 pounds and has a roll of fat in the back of his neck that you could almost set for a book shelf. And the only girl that ever looks at him is his wife, and most of the time when she looks she has to turn away and sob. Poets in real life is a good deal like the rest of us, except that they have time to drink more. There ain't no more Byrons."

"I s'pose not," agreed the Manicure Lady. "But as I was saying, I'm sure glad that June has went."

POTATO BATH AS A HEALTH RESTORER

Medical Man's Joke Brings Joy to Fond English Mother

From the San Francisco Chronicle

LONDON—In a railway carriage that the other day a medical man told a good story which had come within his own experience. A mother was frequently bringing her child to him for treatment, but the doctor could discover nothing amiss except its need of a good wash. She was certain the infant was suffering from some terrible complaint and begged the doctor to do his best. He prescribed a daily wash with the water in which potatoes had been boiled.

Never suspecting that this was merely a ruse to get the child washed, the mother followed the directions to the letter, rosy cheeks appeared and a clean, healthy-looking child gladdened the mother's heart. She sounded the doctor's praises everywhere and advised other mothers to test the efficacy of potato water. It never occurred to her that precisely the same result would have followed the daily application of soap and water.

FOR THE NERVOUS, EMOTIONAL WOMAN

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.

Copyright, 1910, by the New York Evening Journal Publishing Company

What council could you offer to one who is affected more by the emotional side of life than by the sensible, who can be reached through her sentimental nature sooner than by her reasoning power? She is easily moved to tears and is easily hurt and offended.

I would advise this woman to give up eating all solid foods for four to six weeks, and to drink a glass of milk every hour the first week and every half hour after that. No matter if she becomes sick—it will be only temporary sickness! Let her persevere with the treatment until she has gained good, rich blood enough in her veins to restore the nervous system to a normal condition which it has in some way lost. She will be astonished at the improvement in her health and in her cheerfulness and good nature, once she has the will power to continue the milk diet for six weeks.

After that time she can resume an ordinary diet, but she will be better in health by taking only two meals a day.

Then she must begin a course of mental gymnastics, and reason with herself and control her moods, as she would use a check rein upon an unbroken and restless horse if she were driving. Quiet words and gentle assertions to the animal that there is nothing to fear in his path help him to mind the reins. Just so quiet assertions that there is nothing to fear, that all is peace, love and harmony, will help this woman to calm her excited nerves and to overcome her weak tendency to tears and resentment.

The Help of Meditation.

An hour given to self-analysis and meditation each day will help her to realize how unbecoming her moods and tantrums are, and how unlovable she makes herself, and what a crime she commits in destroying the comfort of her family and associates.

One might as well try to find sleep upon a bed of thorns as happiness in the house with a woman who is "easily hurt" and "oversensitive." To be over sensitive means to be wholly bound up in one's self.

The woman who thinks more of the comfort and happiness of others than of herself has little time to be "easily wounded." By comfort I do not mean the physical comforts of an orderly house and a well cooked meal. That is only a part of the comforts of life—the mental and spiritual conditions are of far greater importance. We can find order and good food at hotels and restaurants, but we can not find love and cheer and peace and harmony with loved ones unless our loved ones help us. The sensitive, weeping, hysterical and unreasonable women wants to remember these facts.

But the man who lives with such a nature does not want to aggravate it by thoughtless and inconsiderate actions, or wound it by neglect and indifference. He wants to find love and kindness and patience, and do his best to develop the reasoning powers at the same time.

Make Her Understand.

Approach such a woman that through her sentimental nature make her understand that she is unlovable, and that her moods spoil her attraction for men. Then reason with her.

A young girl was handsomely supported by her uncle. Speaking of his kindness, a married friend said to her one day: "I hope you tell him often how you appreciate what he is doing for you. If you give him a little caress and a word of thanks every day or two, he will feel the investment is paying good dividends."

"But I am not demonstrative, and I can not act a part," the girl replied. "I can not act affectionately unless the mood is on me. I inherit that parsimony, and can not change my nature."

The girl's reasoning was all wrong. She really did appreciate what her uncle was doing for her, and her habit of undemonstrativeness was not natural, but the result of her early environment. She had been reared by parents who commanded obedience, and regarded duty as the governing law, and who left the affectional side of the girl's nature repressed and stunted. No spontaneous expressions of love were ever indulged in by the members of her family, and she imagined her misfortune to be her inheritance. But, even if such an inheritance is given a woman, the first effort of her life should be to overcome it.

Men Like Appreciation.

There is not a man on earth who does not like and appreciate a spontaneous word and act of affection now and then from the mother, sister, daughter, wife or other associate who is receiving his care and support. No matter if he acts embarrassed and ill at ease, or makes a tactless jest of it, or seems a little gruff and says, "What are you after now with all this taffy?" yet in the secret heart of him he is pleased and gratified.

Men have very soft hearts at the core. They are frequently crusted over with a tough outside, and many a man makes it the work of a lifetime to convince the world that he is cold and opposed to all sentiment, when the fact is he is quite the opposite.

The early Puritanical training of our country was a disaster to the race. The repression of natural, affectional impulses, the cold and austere department of members of the family toward one another, have served to fill insane asylums and destroy the home life of thousands of the descendants of these rigidly moral old ancestors of ours. It is a terrible misfortune for any young boy or girl to be reared in such an atmosphere. If it has been your lot, do not imagine it is your nature. If it is your nature, go to work and change it.

Speak the words of gratitude and affection you feel, and force your stiffened heart to limber up enough to bestow a tender little caress upon the persons around you. Think the calisthenics of love and practice them. It will make you a better man or woman, and do more for your home life than cold, loveless duty and dollars can ever do.

DIAMONDS IN ARKANSAS.

Equal in Quality to the South African Gems

From the Technical World

For the first time in the geologic history of North America, diamonds have been found in the original matrix—in Arkansas. Three companies already are operating in the field and more than 200 diamonds have been found, the largest of them weighing six and one-half carats. While, of course, many of the stones are small and almost worthless, that is a characteristic of every diamond field. The larger stones, however, are of excellent quality and cut into finished gems with no more than the average loss in weight. They range in color from the purest blue white to canary yellow and brown.

Only the surface of the diamond field has been touched, and whether untold riches lie beneath it only time can tell. For the present the indications all favor the belief that the mine will become an important factor in the diamond supply of the United States.

That the Arkansas diamonds are not the accidental relics of a bygone glacial age and that the field is both large and potentially immensely profitable has been thoroughly established. The most widely known diamond experts in the United States have pronounced the Arkansas gems fully the equal of the South African product and specially prominent geologists have defined the area in which they are found and pronounced it a true diamond crater, similar to the great diamond mines in South Africa, the peridotite formation in each being essentially similar.

Roller skating has become popular in the Alpine cities of Switzerland, the streets being used. The same is true of Mannheim, Germany. American skates are popular.

THE WAY OF A MAID

She told him not to come, and then,
Because the poor wretch stayed away,
Railed at the faithlessness of men

She told him that he must not stay;
And then, because the poor man went,
Would scarcely speak to him next day

She told him he must never dare
To kiss her, and when he obeyed
She wept because he did not care.

Such be the strange ways of a maid
That make men old before their time,
The mighty weak; the brave, afraid.
—Theodosia Garrison, in Puck

COLORADO COLUMBINE

LIKE wavering bits of pale sunlight, caught in shaded mountain glens, and mossy crevasses, and among rocky cliffs, are the fragile columbines, swaying gracefully, on their dainty stems.

There are two varieties, those of pale gold with deeper yellow centers, and those of delicate lavender, with cream white inner petals

These woodland flowers are found on far rocky heights, where the sunlight lingers longest, and deep down in shaded canons, gleaming through the twilight of the pines

They tremble in the spray of foaming mountain streams and bend from crags and granite ledges close to the sky.

The fragrance of these fragile blossoms is rarely sweet, and never to be forgotten, breathing of wooded glens, and fern deep mountain trails, and canons starred with the gleam of lavender, and of palest gold.

St. Louis, Mo — "I was bothered terribly with a female weakness and had backache, bearing down pains and pains in lower parts. I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound regularly and used the Sanative Wash and now I have no more troubles that way." — Mrs. Al. Herzog, 6722 Forrest Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Because your case is a difficult one, doctors having done you no good, do not continue to suffer without giving Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial. It surely has cured many cases of female ills such as inflammation, ulceration, displacements, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing down feeling, indigestion, dizziness and nervous prostration. It costs but a trifle to try it, and the result is worth millions to many suffering women.

HAVE NO UGLY DUCKLING

Exchange

There is, in nearly every family one ugly duckling and in the generality of cases it is a daughter who seems to be held back, or kept down as it were. She is not always the plainest of the brood, yet there is invariably one who is the Cinderella in every family one who is either not thought so much of as the rest, or who is kept in the background for various motives

It is as a rule, the one who is mother's girl she who is everything in that home circle the one that cannot be done without who is most useful to all at home. Father wants her, mother needs her, the children long for her to room with them, join in their games and she is likewise expected to be in the kitchen to superintend and help when there is company or in the drawing room to entertain her brother's friends, or play propriety for her sisters and their sweethearts

There are many girls who spend their lives in continual drudgery who, from their earliest years have never known a peaceful, happy youth. Girlhood was not for them, for all their lives from their cradle they have been made to carry the burden of life, the cares, troubles and worries of their elders have been placed upon their childish shoulders. In fact, from the first dawn of reason they seem to have been surfeited with woes and troubles; tales of poverty and misery, perhaps, which at least need not have been communicated to them at so tender an age.

It is nice, of course, to be father's confidante or mother's right hand, but there are things that should be kept from children. Life in childhood should be made as bright and happy as possible. It is not right or fair for the young to have to share their elders' troubles on all occasions, childhood does not last long, and it is wrong to embitter a young life too early.

Many children are made old in wisdom and knowledge of the world's troubles ere they are advanced enough to see and understand the reason of these crosses, all this trouble and grief. The consequence, then, is an embittered, soured life. They have known no happy childhood's days all is sordid, black and unhappy memories of what should have been the happiest, brightest years of their life

Naturally, as such a girl grows up, she is old beyond her years, a regular little old woman, and, in consequence the heart of a young child is not in her. The games of frolic and innocent youth are not entered into, not enjoyed by her. The games of other children of her own age seem frivolous in her eyes they are not palatable, her tastes have grown too old, she is constantly with her elders, and her ambitions lie in the same direction as theirs

If mothers and fathers were wise, they would encourage their children to remain as children, nor make them old beyond their years. A Cinderella in every family is a thing to be deplored, there should be no particular slavery amongst brothers and sisters. As the children of a household should share and share alike, the plain one should not be kept in the background because she is plain. No one should be considered the "ugly duckling," or providing they are, they should not be made to feel or realise this. In fact any counterbalancing good quality or talent should be fostered, brought forward, to make up to such a child.

Favoritism among children should never be shown, for it is this oversight of parents, this habit of making favorites, preferring one child to another, which often rankles in children's minds, and is later the cause of jealousy and dissension in families. Often enough, the early treatment of one of these children by the parents causes the younger ones to expect too much from the Cinderella of the family

She should, they think, give in at all times to them, relinquish her own desires and tastes in their favor, and so used are they to her giving in to them, that they almost fail to recognise the fact that she is their sister, that she should possess any individual rights, an opinion of her own.

Many a young girl's life has been spoiled in this way her youth and girlhood blighted. Such a girl, downtrodden and subdued naturally thinks little of herself, and not realising that she possesses good qualities, prepossessing features that might attract, becomes old-fashioned in her style, dress and manner, and often as not her very unselfishness in not seeing after herself, dressing better, is the cause of her being looked down upon as a dowdy and a fright

Men, even, in seeking a wife often enough fail to notice the good qualities beneath that plain costume and many suitors recognise when too late that they would have been wiser in choosing that loving, tender sympathetic girl, who was only considered the "ugly duckling," for their wife, than any of her more showy and brilliant sisters

WEDDINGS IN MIKADO'S LAND

From the Wide World Magazine

A Japanese wedding always takes place in the "sanctuary" which is to be found in every Japanese home the tokonoma, or elevated place of honor. This is decorated for the occasion with symbolic articles, such as pine, plum and bamboo, signifying long life, peace and honesty. Rice always offered to the gods, and the sake jugs from which the "butterflies" (bridesmaids) pour out drink for the happy couple.

Only ten persons are present at the marriage—the bride and groom, their parents, the go-between and his wife and two "butterflies." The bride takes her place near the bridegroom, but, as befits her inferior state, on a lower level. Her veil conceals her face till the ceremony is completed

Presently the "broker" (the man who has brought the couple together) makes formal announcement of the marriage, to the lowtoned accompaniment of singers, without instrumental accompaniment, in an adjoining room.

Ordinarily the Japanese wedding ceremony has neither religious nor legal formality. It is an affair of the families entirely. In former times however, the priests took a large part in the function, and there are indications of a return to this custom. In 1900, for instance, at the marriage of the crown prince, a solemn Shinto service was held within the sanctuary of the imperial palace. Usually, however the wedding ceremony is simply a formal drinking of sake by bride and bridegroom from the same cup. This partaking of the rice and wine together is an act as solemn as drinking from the communion cup among Christians.

Presently the "butterflies" prepare to fulfill their office and on bended knee present the two-spouted cup of sake to the mouths of the bride and bridegroom alternately this drinking from one cup signifying their future unity in joy and sorrow. From each of three tiny cups of different sizes the bride and bridegroom each take three sips. After the third cup the "go-between" announces that the ceremony is ended. "Orio and "Chrysanthemum" are now Mr. and Mrs Tamura, and congratulations and feasting are the order of the day. The groom does not kiss his bride in public that in Japanese eyes would be unpardonably coarse and vulgar.

Removing her white silk veil, the young wife rises from her seat beside the bridegroom and passes the wine cup to the assembled friends. Before the banquet she retires and reappears in a different dress, repeating this three or four times during the dinner, if she comes from a rich home. After the bride and bridegroom have taken their places everybody present approaches bows to them and offers congratulations. With each guest the happy pair are supposed to drink a cup of wine but this is only pretence

The wedding feast itself is a splendid and costly affair with rice served in countless different ways oyster broth, and many other elaborate dishes, washed down with hot and cold sake.

Early in the evening the bride leaves her own home, being carried in a common kago by two coolies if poor, but in a sumptuous norimono, or Sedan-chair, if her father is well to do. Her departure from her childhood's home is made the occasion for a display of the symbolism for which the Japanese are famous. As she leaves she is carried past a tiny fire which has been kindled at the door. In this are burned her dolls and playthings, to indicate that she is passing from girlhood to womanhood

FEAR AND WOMEN'S NERVES

A common symptom of nervousness, especially among women, is the fear of being alone. This is a morbidity which has distinct physiological effects. With its onset the heart begins to beat more quickly, the blood rushes to the head perspiration breaks upon the body, and the mind is flung into turmoil and tumult. The sufferer's intelligence is often quite clear and recognises the absurdity of the dread, yet she cannot shake it off. She resolves again and again to triumph over it, but again and again her resolution is vanquished. How, then, is she to be delivered from this enslaving obsession? No doubt, much may be done by attention to bodily health, diet, sleep, exercise, occupation, etc. Yet it must be admitted that in many cases these forces are powerless to relieve. What such a sufferer needs is the creation of an emotion stronger than the emotion which is causing the mischief. This uplifting and saving emotion may spring up in different ways in different individuals. To some it will be made possible through a sense of duty, to others, through the love of husband or child or sister or friend to others, again, through the thought of the Divine Presence, which is not a mere abstract notion of diety but a feeling of the living presence of Him who is "closer to us than breathing, nearer than hands or feet."

WOMEN AS BANK TELLERS

From the Milwaukee Wisconsin

The Maiden Lane Savings bank of New York city whose president is Leah Windmuller, has sent out a circular saying that after an experience of five years with women as tellers it feels justified in pronouncing them a success. What experience the institution had before launching into the experiment of superseding men with women in these positions it does not disclose but it says that they are punctual pleasant to customers and quick at detecting discrepancies in signatures of drafts. It also intimates that they are exceptionally reliable, affirming that since they have been in office there has been no shortage of cash entrusted to their care and therefore, no need to call upon their bondsmen

This is one of many excellent accounts of the way in which the members of the gentler sex acquit themselves of duties that heretofore have been supposed to belong exclusively to men. There is really no reason for keeping women out of any light employment requiring as especial qualifications alertness and politeness. To put the matter moderately these are certainly as happily exemplified by women as by men

HANDWRITING IN SCHOOLS

From the New Orleans Item

We had to wait for a woman to be put at the head of a public school system before common sense was used in the teaching of handwriting. Mrs. Young, Chicago's woman superintendent, has issued the instruction, "Write any way you please, but write legibly and fast." This is the only writing lesson pupils need, after they have been shown how to shape the letters. The rest is practice. Infinite suffering to cramped backs and fingers, infinite waste of money on ever-changing fads in new copy books and new styles of writing, and infinite puzzling of small brains would have been saved if this had always been the rule in all schools

Nobody writes, in after life, as he was taught at school. Writing expresses individuality as much as one's face does. As we develop and have thoughts of our own to express, we gradually form the style of writing that belongs to us. This is the invariable rule. All that our employers and the public ask of us is that we write speedily and legibly

The evils of the prevailing system and its tremendous waste of time and labor are well set forth by the Chicago Tribune, thus.

"It has been the habit every few years to change the penmanship in the public schools from slant to vertical and from vertical back to slant again, with its attendant extra cost of copy books and the confusion of the pupils. As a matter of fact, the merchant, the factory, and the firms the boys and girls may have to write for when they go to work do not give a rap for vertical or slant. What is wanted is, as Mrs Young puts it, legibility and speed, and the clerk may hold his pen like a dagger, a club, in right hand or left, as long as what he writes can easily be read"

DIDN'T KNOW SHE WAS OVERHEARD.

From the Kansas City Times

That woman's vanity shows itself early in life is shown by an incident that happened yesterday in a Kansas City home. A 3-year-old girl was playing with her little 1-year old sister when the baby began to cry. The girl picked up the baby and sought to soothe it

Don't cry" she said, "you're the prettiest thing in the world" A pause "You're almost as pretty as I am"

REMOVING SUPERFLUOUS HAIR

Now that short sleeves and low neck dresses are in vogue again I know that every woman is worrying about the hair on the arms and neck. I do not like to advise the electric needle, while it probably is the surest way to get rid of the hairs, still the operation is so long and painful, and if the operator is not expert it is dangerous. There are a half-hundred preparations for this purpose. I have examined and tried a great many and can find none that will remove the hair as cleanly and with as little irritation as delol. I have never seen any sores from its use and I think it perfectly safe and antiseptic in every way. You simply mix a little delol with enough warm water to make a soft paste, smear over the hairy places, leave on for a few minutes and then scrape off with a blunt knife. The hairs will come off with the paste and they will not return for a long time, but when they do they will come in lighter than before and harder to remove. By using a little peroxide on the parts after the hair has been removed it will in time kill the roots altogether.

Emma K. Infusion of Henna leaves is recommended for darkening the hair, but I never like to advise any one to change the natural color of their hair. No matter what color your hair is you can make it look beautiful with a little care. Shampoo at least once a month with eggol and apply a tonic every day or so. Make the tonic yourself by mixing half a pint of alcohol with half a pint of water and adding one ounce of beta canthol.

Mrs A O S. The best remedy I know of for tired, burning, sweaty feet is boro lister solution. Get an original ounce bottle of boro lister from your druggist. Dissolve in one and one-half pints of boiling water. When cold add half a pint of alcohol. Use two tablespoonfuls in foot bath every night

Mrs C B. The dark circles around your eyes can be rubbed out by massaging. Make a cream by dissolving three ounces of cerol in a pint of boiling water. Massage every morning and night. This is excellent for the face and arms, too, as it gives them a soft, delicate tint, and you do not have to use any powder

Mrs D. You must be careful about using shampoos, as the most of them contain very strong alkalies. I would advise you to get a package of eggol and make your own shampoo a package makes a full pint which is enough for 20 to 30 shampoos. Eggol is made from eggs and is the best scalp cleaner I have ever seen

Annetta R. The best known treatment for developing the bust is the Vaucaire treatment, but I would advise you to get the ingredients and make it up yourself. Get an original one-ounce bottle of galiol from your druggist. Make a pint of granulated sugar syrup, say half a pound of sugar to a pint of water, add the galiol and take two spoonfuls four times a day. Massaging with cocoa butter or cerol cream will help. The true galiol is quite expensive, but it is the only preparation I know of that will really do the work.

Clara L. There are so many different kinds of tonics I hardly know which you want, but I presume what is usually called a blood tonic to drive the impurities out of the blood and cure pimples and blotches. Get an ounce of sarsene from your druggist, make a pint of sugar syrup, add the sarsene and takes two teaspoonful three or four times a day

Amy L. They say borothol solution is the most wonderful discovery for eczema and all skin diseases. It is made by dissolving two ounces of borothol in a pint of hot water and adding two tablespoonfuls of glycerine. Apply on cotton to the affected parts. This will stop the itching instantly

Miss L. G. To keep the hands and face soft and white use after washing and drying a lotion made as follows. Dissolve the contents of a two-ounce package of amarol in a pint of hot water. You will not need to use any powder with the lotion, and you need have no fears of hair growing on the face and arms

GOLD DIGGERS BEAT ZOOZ IN FIRST GAME BY BUNCHING HITS OFF MERZ

Fourth Inning Proves Undoing of Local Team. Buchanon Pitches Star Game Gail Fields Well and Vernon Makes Homer.

CRIPPLE CREEK, July 16.—After pitching good ball for three innings, and with two down in the fourth, Captain Merz of the Colorado Springs Zoos had a private aviation meet, and when he finally reached ground, and pulled Hastings in from left field to dish up the benders, six Gold Diggers had scored, and the game was cinched for Cripple Creek. Hastings twirled in good shape during the remainder of the uphill drag, but the men behind him could not find Buchanon.

The feature of the game was the work of the Gold Camp twirler, who allowed but five hits and struck out 12 of the Colorado Springs lads. Gail pulled down four line drives in center field that looked like sure hits. In the ninth inning Vernon got his second single of the day, and dropped the sphere over the outfield fence, trotting home with the Zoos' second tally. Had the hit come at a more opportune time, it would probably have been costly for Cripple Creek, but the sacks were clear, and the slugger went around alone.

The same teams will play this afternoon, and Ackley, a former Gold Digger, will be on the mound for Gail's team, while Reynolds will oppose him for the locals.

Robbins Breaks Into State Baseball

The Team Which Faces Pueblo C. F. and I. This Afternoon at Zoo Park.

The Robbins team of this city has undertaken to solve a difficult problem in the C. F. and I. team, which it will oppose this afternoon at Zoo park, as McIntyre, the twirler who let the slugging Zoo bunch down with but seven bingles a week ago will be on the summit of the hill and will try to get revenge for the beating handed him by the Zooz. The Robbins bunch has been doing unusual work among the amateur bat wielders, and this will be the first opportunity to line up against a classy out of town aggregation.

The iron wrestlers are determined to make a good showing today in the hope of arranging another game with the Zooz, and as the Robbins feel rather touchy about taking the losing end of the proposition, there will be some fur flying in addition to baseballs, when Goshen calls "play ball."

The errors which were largely responsible for the defeat of the Pueblo crowd when they played the Zooz, are to be conspicuous by their absence for all time, according to the manager, and in that case the Bessemer lads would be a tough proposition for any state team. Earp will do the heavy stunt this afternoon for the local team, and Bruce will stop the winders that get past the bat. The game will be called at 3:15.

The lineup for today follows:

OFFER $30,000 TO MAN WHO FLIES IN 100 HOURS FROM NEW YORK TO ST. LOUIS

Newpapers Arrange Contest to Test Ability of Machines to Travel Long Distances in Consecutive Flights.

NEW YORK, July 16.—The official conditions governing the proposed aeroplane flight between New York and St. Louis were made public here today. They follow:

"The New York World and St. Louis Post-Dispatch will give $30,000 to the first aviator who, between August 15, 1910, and January 1, 1911, flies from New York to St. Louis or from St. Louis to New York within 100 consecutive hours, using the same aeroplane from start to finish.

"The only condition attached to this offer is that at least three days' notice of the intention to start for this prize must be given to either the New York World or the St. Louis Post-Dispatch in order that announcement may be made of the actual starting and finishing points, the actual route and other details as agreed upon."

The distance between the two cities is 900 miles as the crow flies, and 1,048 miles as the mails go. The average fast train time is 29 hours and the average train speed 36 miles an hour. The best average speed for sustained flight in an aeroplane is 54 4-5 miles an hour. On account of the configuration of the land, it is unlikely that any aviator will attempt to lay out his route in a straight line. The actual distance he will fly, therefore, remains guess work and will only be determined by the performance itself.

The conditions above leave the aviator free to choose his own starting point and to make his landings for fuel, repairs and rest whenever he wishes, or as necessity dictates. The donors of the prize state that they wish to allow the widest latitude in the interpretation of the clause "the same aeroplane from start to finish." That is, such important repairs, as the installation of a new propeller, a new engine cylinder, new struts or new brace guys may be made without impairing the defined identity of the machine.

Given 100 hours in which to cover an estimated 1,000 miles, the aviator would have to fly only a little more than 200 miles a day for a little less than five days—if he equaled the speed of Curtis between New York and Albany, this would mean two hours in the morning and two hours in the afternoon with as long an intermission as desired for resting and tuning up the engine.

BETTING ON NEVADA FIGHT NEVER EQUALED

By BERT E. COOLYER.

CHICAGO, Ill., July 16.—That Chicago is not the only clearing house for wagers a la turf, but of the entire sporting community, at home and abroad, was well attested with the recent Jeffries-Johnson fight. A recapitulation of the wagers large and small placed in the many sporting rendezvous of this city, where odds were posted on the fight, elicits the fact that upwards of $600,000 was handled in commissions. On the other hand telegraphic reports, obtained after careful inquiry on three continents show that the grand total of bets made on the big mill aggregated upwards of $3,000,000—far and away a new record for any similar event. Next to the Nevada battle, that of Corbett and Fitzsimmons, stood out in bold relief as the record holder, so far as wagering was concerned. Eminent statisticians are authority for the statement that $1,000,000 was bet on the latter fight.

ATHLETICS WIN GOOD GAME.

PHILADELPHIA, July 16.—Before 12,000 fans, the Athletics beat St Louis 2 to 1 today, thereby making it three victories in four games. Bailey started to pitch for the Browns and was batted hard. Ray took his place in the fourth, and the Athletics were powerless before him.

Morgan pitched excellently and was particularly strong in the pinches. The Browns looked dangerous in the ninth when the first two batsmen reached first base, but sharp fielding and strong pitching prevented St. Louis from scoring.

ED WALSH IS THE GOAT.

BOSTON, July 16.—Boston celebrated Mary Baker G. Eddy's eighty-ninth birthday by walloping the luckless White Sox for the fifth straight time, 3 to 1.

Speaker oversat Ed Walsh and probably broke all records hitting against the big White Sox. His slams broke up the game, he making a single, a triple and home run, the last being one of the hardest hits ever made. Walsh presented Boston with two runs in the second by a wild throw.

COUNTRY CLUB GOLF PLAYERS IKY FOR FOWLER CUP

The play in the first round of the competition for the Fowler golf trophy, between members of the Cheyenne Mountain Country club yesterday afternoon, resulted in some excellent playing, wherein Dunbar Carpenter, J. J. Cowan and J. McK. Ferriday were the high men. The method of arriving at a winner will take several Saturdays as the winners in the contests yesterday must contest with the winners of other preliminaries, and the process of elimination will take about a month to decide the winner.

In the play yesterday, Dunbar Carpenter defeated W. F. Douglas, with 4 up and 3 to play. J. J. Cowan won from George B. Russell, 6 up and 3 to play, the third match, between Ferriday and W. M. Randol, went to the former, with 1 up in 19 holes. Several other pairs, whose names will be given later, will compete in the second round next Saturday.

LONDON, July 16.—The lawn tennis association has accepted the invitation of the Australian association to send a team to the colony to play the preliminary games for the Davis cup. The names of those who will make up the team have not yet been announced.

REMEDY THE WEAKNESS OF BASEBALL BY A TRAINING SCHOOL FOR UMPIRES

By SAM CRANE.

NEW YORK, July 17.—Why not establish a school for baseball umpires?

Surely President Tom Lynch and Ban Johnson would advocate such an educational scheme for the betterment of umpires and consequent increase in popularity of the great national game.

Umpires can do as much if not more toward popularizing baseball than a star player, but the great trouble is that the general run of umpires are so dense that they couldn't appreciate the fact. They go along antagonizing both the baseball public and the players as if that was what they were appointed for—a sort of preordained right and privilege that they refuse to relinquish.

There have been schools for players but I know of no department of baseball that needs so much improvement as that of umpires.

These officials require more schooling in the finer points of the game. The majority of them possess little more than a mere superficial knowledge of what is known as "inside" baseball, and as for being polite and level-headed, the general run of ball players have umpires beaten to a frazzle.

Umpires of today have failed to advance at the same pace that the sport has progressed. They have gone back in fact and the umpires of the present are not nearly as competent as those who officiated 25 years ago. With the exception of John Sheridan, umpire in the American league who can an umpire be found who is anywhere near the standard set by Tom Lynch, now president of the National league, John Gaffney, Charley Daniels, "Billy" Quinn and "Honest John" Kelly?

Hank O'Day of the National league is a capable official but he doesn't begin to fill the bill as Tom Lynch or game judgment or level-headedness. O'Day, if he gets provoked, is as bull-headed as a Texas steer running wild in the crowded streets of a big city. His brain seems to thicken when he is nagged and then what good judgment he may be blessed with flies off at a tangent, and then it is good-bye to correct decisions. O'Day's over-night decision that defrauded the Giants out of the championship in 1908 will never be forgiven by many people, and showed conclusively that he has not the stiffness of spinal column, without which any umpire is not exactly good.

O'Day is sometimes called the best umpire in the National league. In Chicago he is especially looked up to as a fair and honest official, but that is the most natural conclusion for Windy City enthusiasts to arrive at. Why wouldn't they?

President Lynch's staff of umpires this season has been the laughing-stock of baseball fandom. Many of his umpires are neither competent nor do they understand baseball. At times it appears as if they were not blessed with good common sense. That they should be given the necessary authority to conduct games without friction is not to be desired and it appears ridiculously farcical sometimes to see an umpire who is grossly and palpably incompetent "call down" some objecting players who know more real baseball than the lordly-disposed umpire could learn in a hundred years.

Good capable umpires, physically and mentally able to fill the position acceptably, are scarcer articles than good ball players, and a school for umpires is a thing that must come in time. The great big majority of officials who are now posing before a much-abused baseball public as such are a poor lot and a detriment to the

CRITICISM OF JIM JEFFRIES, UNJUST; JOHNSON LOOKS TO BE LONG TIME WINNER

By W. W. NAUGHTON

SAN FRANCISCO, July 16.—From being the hope of the white race, Jim Jeffries has become the jibe of the white race, and I for one do not consider he is deserving of the approbrium that is being heaped upon him. His critics are flaying him mercilessly, and poor Jim must feel as Wolsey felt when he said "vain pomp and glory of the world, I hate ye; I feel my heart now opened." —

No one seems to remember the tremendous pressure that was brought to bear on Jeffries to get him to come forth from the protecting shadows of domestic life and bear the brunt of the ring game again. I recollect the circumstances distinctly, because I was in the foremost of the newspaper pack that hounded Jim into signing with Johnson. For this reason alone, if for not other, I do not feel like rebuking him for failing to accomplish what he was forced to attempt.

Some of the accusations made against Jeffries and some of the motives attributed to him in connection with the recent fiasco, sound like the mouthings of imbeciles. For one thing the report that Jeffries and those around him knew all along that the big fellow was doomed to defeat and that they kept the knowledge from a waiting public.

One incident alone is sufficient to show that of the two heavyweights Jeffries was not the first to weaken. This was when, three days before the fight Johnson through Tex Rickard, proposed an equal split of the purse, instead of the "15 and 25" called for by the articles. Jeffries' reply to the Johnson proposition would not look well in print. A day later Johnson suggested 60 per cent and 40 per cent, and after keeping the money coming a while, Jeffries accepted.

Many years ago, when Jeffries was still in training at Rowardennan, the writer told that Jeffries had his good days and bad days, and remarked that if the Fourth of July happened to be a bad day there would be trouble in store for Jeffries. Well, the Fourth was one of his bad days, all right. In this connection, I might say that if the contest had taken place before Jeffries broke camp at Rowardennan he would undoubtedly have given a better account of his self, but I do not believe that there was a day since the articles were signed on which Jeffries could have defeated Johnson.

In view of what Jeffries has accomplished in the past, the world of sport can afford to be kinder to him than it is at present. Even with all the reproach that came to him and is still coming eliminated, Jeffries' punishment for a poor showing is terrible to contemplate.

Jeffries, the conqueror of Corbett, Fitzsimmons, Peter Jackson, Tom Sharkey, Gus Ruhlin and Jack Monroe, is forgotten. Only the Jeffries who made such a miserable fight with Jack Johnson will be remembered.

At least, that is the present outlook. There are always reactions in cases of this kind, and it may be before a year passes Jim's exit from the game will be kindly slurred over, and the performances of his earlier career remembered. It is so with John L. Sullivan, Jim Corbett and Bob Fitzsimmons, and Jeffries surely is entitled to as much consideration as the champions who preceded him.

By the way, have you noticed that the heavyweight champion of the world is always on the down grade physically when he is defeated?

Wasn't it the case when Sullivan lost to Corbett, and when Corbett lost to Fitzsimmons, and when Fitzsimmons lost to Jeffries?

CUBS AND GIANTS WILL SCRAP FOR THE RAG IN NATIONAL

BY SAM CRANE.

NEW YORK, July 16.—The Fourth of July is the turning point in the National league schedule of games, the season being about half over every year on that day.

As a general thing, about this time, some correct line can be had each year as to what club will win the championship, but the present season has afforded so many surprises and so startling changes of form by the various teams that to pick the winner of this year's gonfalon is a very difficult proposition to tackle.

The Cubs after a very poor start have come back closer to their old-time winning form than any other team, with the possible exception of the Giants, and the latter, although they are holding down second place and are clinging to the skirts of the Cubs with a firm clutch, still McGraw's men are playing very erratic ball. They have lost many games that they looked to have cinched with a lead-pipe certainty, and a "blow up" by them is frequently feared by Gotham fans. Still they have as good a chance to win the pennant as any other club. Many of the older players, who have been more or less tied up by the beastly weather of the springs months, have thawed out nicely and most promisingly under the influence of the hot spell, and they can be depended on to keep their stride until the end of the season.

The Cubs, without doubt have the best baseball machine in the league. In fact, they are a far classier aggregation than the Giants, but that does not guarantee them the "rag." Their pitchers appear to be going back just at present with the exception of "three fingered" Brown, and that is a bad sign, for pitchers should be "coming" now instead of retrograding.

Bowman lost about ten games before he gained his first brackets, but he is pitching splendid ball again. But he can not hold up the entire pitching department of the Cubs no more than Mathewson can for the Giants.

I am of the opinion that the Giants are better off for pitchers than the Cubs and that asset is bound to count good and strong in the long and punishing race that is ahead.

The Pittsburg Pirates' fall from their high estate is due greatly to their pitchers failing to make good, but aside to the surprising tumble from fame that Wagner has shown this year. The big Dutchman has been pretty near the Pirates' whole team for ten or a dozen years, and his failure to come back this season has thrown the world's champions into a "fit" that I can't figure how they can get out of.

The Phillies and the Cincinnatis have played some very good and some very bad ball this season, but I look for it to shape to nose out the Reds.

The championship lays between the Cubs and Giants, and it looks to me to be about an even proposition.

"JUST WAIT," SAY FANS.

CHICAGO, July 16.—If the baseball wiseacres are to be credited, no one need worry about the Chicago White Sox. When the young stockings moved into their Grecian-like baseball park this month—the grounds which cost Comiskey more than a half-million dollars many fans remarked that at least the movement was unfortunately unpsychological, for the Sox were then languishing in sixth place and were apparently pursued to death by an unidentified baseball jinx. However, those who have watched closely the work of Comiskey's new infield—which represents a large fractional part of the $50,000 which the old Roman spent for new players last season declare that it is but a matter of time before the White Sox will be one of the dominant factors in the American league race. Not this season, perhaps, but at the latest, next.

Every one of the young 'uns whom Hughie Duffy has retained seem to have everything. It merely takes time for them to adjust themselves to the big ring style of play. And, too, the Sox were handicapped by an awkward start, and this purely psychological effect which would damage even the work of the oldest veteran was doubly disconcerting to the youngsters. But the slogan on the south side is: "Just wait."

BETTING ON FIGHT

handled the largest amount of anteing commissions on the go. This was probably accounted for by the fact that Tom Corbett, the "official" commissioner of the impresario triumvirate, Richard and Gleason—had his headquarters in the coast city until four days prior to the battle. At Corbett's and other places, where odds were posted in San Francisco, shows a total of something over $160,000.

Next in line comes Reno, the scene of the battle. The play in the latter city was unusually lethargic until the arrival of Corbett. The latter's arrival was responsible for an almost superabundance of Jeffries money, which was accountable for the palpably unusual quotation of 2 to 1 offered about the chances of the white man. Then too a pronounced betting feud was precipitated between the "official" commissioner and Jimmy Coffroth, the San Francisco bookmaker, who was installed across the street from Corbett at Reno. The lively tussles a la chalk, were responsible for the fluctuation in prices with the D. O. P. the beneficiary. Play at both these places was tremendous, one statistician well versed, placing the operations at $500,000 for the four days.

If, however, the antering betting was tremendous the ringside play was unprecedented, and those who witnessed the golden stream ooze forth to the bookmakers will probably never live to see it duplicated. The ringside section recorded about the famous McAuliff-Myers fight in New Orleans, when nearly every bookmaker in the country was present, paled into the infinitesimal. Corbett and Lawler, the "big liners" swamped, and in a few moments indiscriminate shoe-string bookmakers sprung up on all sides. So persistent and frenzied grew the wagering that it was necessary to call on the police reserves to quell what threatened an open riot. Any attempt at drawing an accurate estimate of the amount, wagered around that ring would be as equally sane a task as attempting to fly to the moon. It however, all goes to demonstrate how the spirit of speculating on the outcome of the battle permeated the atmosphere everywhere.

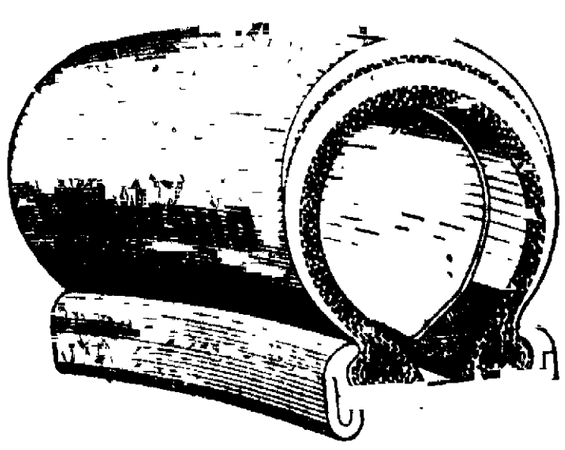

Probably this is better illustrated, and attested by the writer, who was in daily contact with the betting factions, when it is stated that people who never in their lives ventured a dollar on any sporting event were there with a "flyer" on either "Jack" or "Jim." Racial prejudice, contrary to general supposition, failed to play such a prominent part. In fact, it might be stated, that aside from a few stiff commissions from the south, all betting was on cold deduction or based on "inside information," presumed or otherwise. Probably the work of the hectic pessimist was more paramount anent this battle than any previous fight in the history of the game. The much mooted question "Will Jeff come back" was an incentive, while not a few ugly rumors surrounded the overwhelming commissions from New York. The latter collectively and otherwise, could not be classed otherwise than "wise money." Hymes, Considine, Goodwin and the balance of the Sullivan following dumped something over $28,000 into one book here on Jeffries. The eagerness with which they accepted 1 to 2 on the boilermaker, made the conservative betters gasp. "Any old price is good enough" was the slogan of the lads from Broadway. Their nonchalance had the effect of lending wings to the subtle murmurings "the fight is framed," "they have an ace card." Gradually, however, the Johnson money was coaxed from its hiding places the abundance of which during the preultimate hours forced the odds slowly but surely upward.

One of the unusual freaks of the betting angle on this fight was the amount of money wagered in France. In fact Paris was a regular seething hotbed of Johnson money. In England wagering was also exceptionally brisk, while from Australia comes the statement that the play almost equaled that of the now famous Burns-Johnson mill. In a word betting on this fight was universal and unprecidented with the estimated wagering of $3,000,000 being well within the range of conservatism.

RACING OUTLOOK FOR WINTER IS PROMISING

By BERT E. COLLYER.

CHICAGO, July 16. Racing in the middle west is just now enjoying a slight siesta, with the Windsor association track, across the river from Latonia, both boasting of the "best spring" in the history of the respective tracks, and showing handsome balances on the right side of the ledger. Down at Latonia, it is the purpose of the management to make extensive improvements; in fact, it is not a too-far-fetched prognostication that ere spring-time rolls around, Latonia will be able to boast of the best-appointed race track in the west.

Tentative plans call for an expenditure of $100,000, of which the erection of a new steel grandstand, paddock and betting inclosure are the outstanding features. These will be erected on the opposite side of the track to the present structure, or, in racing parlance, on the "back stretch." In this the association has a twofold motive. In the first place, the crowds approaching the present grandstand are required to cross several railway tracks, and, as a consequence, numerous accidents, fatal and otherwise, have been recorded. Then, too, the afternoon sun shines directly into the faces of the grandstand patron, which, of course, will all be overcome with the structure turned about.

Speaking of Latonia brings to mind that the breath of scandal has been exceptionally scarce during the recent meeting, all of which is a keen tribute to the managerial capacity of John Hackmeister.

At Fort Erie, the elimination of John Madigan from active participation in the working staff bore exceptionally good fruit. Madigan, by his overbearing tactics, not to say "others," of which the least said the better, brought the Canuck course into disrepute. For the benefit of the game, it is to be hoped that Mr. Madigan is kept "out of office." The very excellent work of Edward Magian, who occupied the dual position of secretary and handicapper, was of a character warranted to enlist the approval of every well wisher of the sport. His motto, of "no favors and fair treatment to all," might well be emulated by secretaries of other courses throughout the country.

The winter racing establishments are already busy bidding for patronage. Colonel Matt Winn, manager of the Empire City Racing association, at Yonkers, N. Y., and who occupies a similar position at Churchill Downs, Louisville, also at Juarez, Mexico, is authority for the statement that Juarez will throw open her gates, November 1. This, the colonel states, is to meet the demands of the horsemen who, to use the vernacular, will be without a place to play their heads after September 1, the date when the fiscatory legislation is due to take effect in New York state. Colonel Winn has instructed Lyman B. Davis, secretary-handicapper, to arrange a program similar to that for Juarez that will bring the daily purse offerings up to $3,000. There will be 100 days of racing at Juarez.

The recent victory of the Florida Live Stock and Racing association meant the interpretation of the word "possibilities," and which was precipitated last winter, when an eminent jurist held that the association had been operating well within the law, sets aside the least possible obstacle in Florida. Jacksonville, where there will be 100 or more days of racing during the coming winter, is a natural point, inasmuch as it is within easy access of the middle west and only a few hours out of New York. Then, too, the climate and the general environments are such that it is bound to be an attractive magnet.

Secretary H. D. Brown is at present in Buenos Ayres, inspecting a site for a race track. On his return, which will be about August 15, announcement of the list of stakes for Moncrief park will be made. California, too, is again in the running for winter patronage. Gossip has it that there will be meetings at both Santa Anita and Oakland during the coming winter. Martin Natnanson is authority for the statement that the purses at Oakland will be raised very materially over what obtained last winter.

KETCHEL BELIEVES THE FINISH FIGHT WILL BE HEREAFTER STOPPED

STANLEY KETCHEL.

Stanley Ketchel, middleweight champion, and one of the cleanest cut and gamiest fighters who ever stepped into a ring, believes that Governor Gillett of California has set the pace for other state executives of the nation.

"It is the so-called finish fight which has tabooed the game to a large extent," says the champ middleweight. "These bouts were made a hobby by Battling Nelson because the Battler thought no one could beat him over the long route, whereas he felt that he might get outpointed in a shorter battle.

"Then the sanguinary talk between Jeff and Johnson and the fact that they finally signed for one of these finish fights turned the side of public opinion roughly against prize fighting.

"I look to see the time when boxing will be regarded as is fencing now and I would not be at all surprised were the bouts of the future to be limited to 10 rounds at the outside. Ten rounds are amply sufficient to establish superiority in boxing if not in bulldog courage.

"It will put the game on a much more solid basis if the 10-round rule is effected. I do not believe, either that it would be a difficult thing to proselyte the fans for there is no dodging the fact that finish fights are nought but exhibitions of brutishness. When boxing is conducted for science as is fencing, the game's stock will take a boost.

Such are the words of the champion knocker-out of the day. And there is lots of logic in his argument.

AUTOMOBILE NEWS

It is remarkable how a world tour to Africa will change a person's viewpoint. A year and a half ago Col. Roosevelt had small liking for the motor vehicle, and, unlike his successor, he rarely, if ever, made use of it. Now he is using two of them at Sagamore Hill.

It is expected that the city fathers of Philadelphia will appropriate $5,000 to be added to the $5,000 already offered as prize money by the Quaker City Motor club for the Fairmount Park race in the fall, and private subscriptions will be received by the club's committee.

Providence, R. I., is considering the passage of an ordinance regulating automobile traffic through its streets. The ordinance contemplates putting into effect the "one way" rule on many of the business streets and the setting apart of various stations for parking purposes.

Many of the horse breeders in the famous Blue Grass region of Kentucky had their colts down at the edge of the road when the Glidden tourists passed through that section, and more than one runaway resulted. The horsemen were trying to break their animals to the sight of automobiles.

Even a sleeper has to be modern now-a-days to be successful. Henry Ringling, one of the six famous brothers, has purchased a modern touring car and now he always heads the "astounding aggregation of the attractions of the circus—earth and water" in his new automobile.

Dr. Frank C. Meeker, chairman of the Orphan's Day Outing committee of the New Jersey Automobile and Motor club, has appointed a subcommittee to ascertain how many children will be available for the outing, which has been set for Wednesday, July 20.

A reliability contest for commercial vehicles will be held in conjunction with the first annual Wisconsin tour of the Wisconsin State Automobile association for the Milwaukee Sentinel trophy, July 18 to 22 inclusive. A valuable trophy will be awarded to the winner.

Twenty-five automobile owners of Ellwood City, Pa., have formed the Ellwood City Automobile club, and will make an active campaign for good roads in conjunction with the Lawrence County Automobile club, of New Castle, Pa., which has offered a prize for the best piece of road made in that county this year.

Joseph H. York, of the Zodiac Dirigible Airship company, is negotiating for the privilege of conducting an airship line between Newport, R. I., and Narragansett Pier this summer. He says that it is possible that a dirigible balloon will be used to transport passengers between these two points.

"Motor Row," being erected in North Capitol avenue, Indianapolis, at a cost of $1,745,000, will be equipped with a station for the alighting of aeroplanes and also a depot for the accommodation of aeronauts. A structure the heights of the buildings will be erected for the aeroplanes, while the roofs of the buildings will be used as a depot.

It is advisable to inspect and "air" the spare covers and tires which may be carried upon the car enclosed in waterproof covers, for if such tires remain in their coverings for some months they may become mouldy and rotten—owing to want of air to dispel the certain amount of dampness which must find its way inside the cover in course of time.

Employers of high-grade machinists, pattern makers, molders and other skilled help in the metal trade at Cincinnati declare there is a decided shortage in supply here. Many men have migrated to other cities in the past six months to meet the extraordinary demands for such labor, created by automobile factories.

A hydro-carbon motor, controlled by one lever, that starts without cranking and runs at any desired speed, is the latest creation of a well-known inventor. This engine operates exactly as a steam engine, but does not have the attendant complications of steam. It works equally well on alcohol, crude oil kerosene or gasolene.

The Motor Cups Holding company has received the entries of three more racers for the contest for the Automobile Club of America's Grand Prize, Gold Cup, which is to be held on October 15th. Ralph De Palma, Felice Nazzaro and Louis Wagner have been named to drive the cars.

One editorial paragrapher has been so impertinent as to ask how it has happened that Chancellor Day, of Syracuse university, has condemned motoring as a "curse" to the country, when it has proved such a source of profit to the oil trust, which he has often praised.

The Delaware Optical society has taken up the matter of vision of automobile drivers, and may ask the legislature to pass an act requiring automobile drivers to have their eyes tested, and to show a certain standard of efficiency before being granted a license to operate a machine.

A judge in a Dayton (Ohio) police court has acquired the habit of fining all automobilists convicted of exceeding the Ohio speed law $10 and costs, and then, to make things more interesting for the offending automobilists, he adds a dollar for each mile in excess of the legal speed.

Philadelphia has installed an auto patrol wagon, the first to be used in the city.

It is predicted that by August 1st, all of the cab and taxicab business of New York will be run as one concern.

The invitation to Col. Roosevelt to attend the Elks' convention on July 11th, was carried from Detroit to New York by two motorists in a runabout.

As a result of the success of the recent hill climb at Portland, Maine, it has been decided to make it an annual event.

The supervisors of Washington county, Virginia, are planning to spend $200,000 on roads this year, while adjoining Washington county, just over the Tennessee line, Sullivan county is spending $300,000 for this purpose.

Use of cars without the owner's permission has become an unhealthy sport in Philadelphia. This is the result of a sentence of thirty days in jail imposed by Judge Davis, of Common Pleas court, upon a chauffeur who "helped himself" to a car in a garage.

Careless drivers of automobiles who have been responsible for unnecessary noises at night have caused the board of health of Hoboken to pass an ordinance prohibiting the blowing and ringing of horns, bells and other noise-producing devices on automobiles or other vehicles in the streets and public places of the city between the hours of 9 p. m. and 8 a. m. Horns must be blown only as warning to another vehicle or person in danger and no noise must be made while a car is standing still or for the purpose of arousing a person in a garage. Fines of $5 to $50 are provided for violations of the ordinance, which was adopted without a dissenting vote.

A taxicab line will be started in Indianapolis as soon as the cars can be received by a company which has been organized with a capitalization of $50,000. About twenty taxicabs will be placed in service.

New York has 80,000 miles of public highways, 3,000 of which are state roads, maintained by the state. The remainder are under the care of county or town. The Highway Commission hopes to add 500 miles of improved roads this year.

A compilation made by a well-known motor car company of the cars it turned out last year shows that green has been the favorite color, it ranking 30.42 per cent, blue follows with 22.77 per cent and then wine with 17.46 per cent.

By a number of experiments, most of the French and German aviators have satisfied themselves that a trailing tail secures steadiness of flight and this construction feature has therefore been incorporated in nearly all European fliers.

New York's new motor law provides that the term chauffeur shall mean any person operating or driving a motor vehicle as an employe or for hire. This definition is inclusive and exclusive. Any person coming within the definition is a chauffeur. All persons who do not fit the definition are not chauffeurs, and consequently do not have to comply with the provisions of the law concerning employed drivers.

A stock company is being formed at Utica to manufacture an eight-cylinder motor car. A six-cylinder automobile said to be the first ever built in America with the cylinders cast en bloc, is being constructed in Cleveland, Ohio.

The Boston Chronograph Club is rapidly winning a name all over the country. It is composed entirely of expert timers and scorers, and has furnished timers for the first of the Vanderbilt Cup races and for the Ormond-Florida Beach meets.

Complete figures for New York's Orphan's Day parade show that the 400 cars in line formed a procession four miles long. Of the vehicles there were 200 touring cars, 15 sightseeing cars, three opera busses and several motor stages. Thirty-five hundred children were carried, some of whom were driven from Yonkers, a round-trip ride of 75 miles. The total value of the cars was about two million dollars.

Motorists are advised to secure their Maryland license numbers before July 1, on which date the new law goes into effect. It is stated that after that date residents of other states will not be permitted across the line without displaying the license. At the last session of the Maryland legislature a bill was passed providing for four constables to be mounted on motor cycles to see that the law is enforced.

Secretary of State Knox and Senor de la Barra, ambassador from Mexico, are now working over a treaty which will shortly be submitted to the senate for ratification, to take cognizance of international airship traffic. This step is rendered advisable in the minds of both men to prevent the smuggling of lightweight articles, such as diamonds, silks, drugs and gold from one country to the other.

Noise is said to be the most annoying part of an automobile, it creeps in at the invitation of age but slowly in a well-made car; but it has the unhappy knack of starting to wear out its welcome much too soon in the other kind. The man of experience defers the evil day and puts money in his pocket at a single stroke. His receipt is very simple; it calls for a liberal supply of good lubricating oil.

In reply to recent charges that the automobile is an economic waste a leading car manufacturer has figured that there are 7,000,000 horse-drawn vehicles in the United States in daily average use, employing 10,000,000 horses, at a yearly cost of $1,356,000,000, to maintain and operate. He then figures that the cost to drive and maintain automobiles in place of these horse-drawn vehicles would be $700,000,000 per year, or an economic saving of $997,000,000.

It is reported that another attempt will be made to secure the passage of reciprocal motor vehicle legislation in New Jersey in case Governor Fort calls an extra session of the state legislature. The officials of the Associated Automobile clubs of New Jersey, the state organization of motoring clubs, made an unsuccessful attempt to secure the passage of an amendment to the present motor vehicle law that would grant to residents of other states the same privileges as their home states grant to non-resident motorists.

Operators of automobiles for hire will not have such a cinch in Detroit in the future as they have had in the past, according to a new ordinance. When the taxicab regulation was drawn up, it was so worded as to apply only to automobiles equipped with a taximeter. This, coupled with some ambiguity in the wording, has allowed drivers of automobiles not fitted out with a taximeter to charge any fare they pleased, which they promptly did. The new ordinance is intended to remedy this defect.

According to a statement by the president of one of the leading Detroit motor manufacturers, his company expects to turn out between 50,000 and 60,000 cars in 1911, or an output of $55,000,000. The company is now employing 12,500 men, and this number will be increased to 17,000 by the first of the year.

Advocates of the use of heavy grease instead of cylinder oil for lubricating transmission gear systems, maintain that cylinder oil is too high priced, that grease is not likely to slay in and that a lubricant oozing out prevents a dirt from migrating in, hence it is a good and efficient seal.

French technical papers keep a close tab on the doings of American engineers, and it is interesting to note that American engineers are in the lead in divers ways even to the extent, sometimes, of using ideas which are only known to the French school design through the medium of the technical press.

Sacramento, Cal., is now using an automobile police patrol.

The Bridgeport (Conn.) Board of Police Commissioners has issued orders to arrest violators of the state muffler law.

The Motor Racing association will hold an other twenty-four-hour race to be held at Brighton Beach track on Friday and Saturday, July 15th and 16th.

The worst drawback to motoring in Kentucky is the excessive rate of toll on the main pikes. The average per car on the Glidden Tour run from Covington to Louisville was about $2.

Sudden changes of the character or quantity of mixture when a motor is laboring should cause trouble. Shock is a bad condition to induce in anything. A motor is no exception to the rule.

Prince Edward Island's legislature by a unanimous vote, has refused to repeal the law making it a criminal offense, punished by a high fine, to run an automobile or any other vehicle on any of the public highways in the province.

GOOD RACING IN UTAH

SALT LAKE CITY, July 16.—Marian Casey, running true to her best form, took the Salt Lake selling handicap from a good field at Buena Vista today. The first mile and a half race ever run in Utah was easy for Round and Round. The Daroux horse took the lead nearly all the way and won easily from a good field.

HELENE WINS BIG STAKE

EMPIRE CITY RACE TRACK, July 16.—Helene, a 6 to 1 shot, easily won the $3,000 Brighton Junior stakes here today, defeating a poor field of two-year-olds. The race was marred by the accident to the favorite, Seth. He stepped in a hole on the upper turn, which threw him out of the contest.

CRITICISM OF JIM JEFFRIES

ment of defeat when he insisted on the lion's share of the purse in his fight with Jeffries on Coney Island? Wasn't the Jeffries that Johnson defeated a mere wraith of the formidable Jeffries of six years ago?

It almost looks as if the world is too small to hold a couple of able-bodied heavyweights at one and the same time. The nearest approach to such a condition of affairs was when Tom Sharkey and Jim Jeffries fought such close finishes, and I am never done thinking that the difference between Sharkey and Jeffries, as fighting men, was merely their difference in height.

I wonder will we have to wait until Jack Johnson's splendid fighting talents begin to stale before we see him defeated? At present Billy Delaney is touting Al Kaufman as Jack's successor, but it seems as if there will have to be a terrible falling off on Johnson's part before Delaney's prophecy comes through.

Most every one is surfeited with fighting and fight talk at present, I ween, but it won't be very long before there will be a general demand for Johnson to put himself in harness again. Then no doubt, Sam Langford will be the man sent forward to meet him. Joe Woodman, manager for Langford says that his man can command $20,000 to box, the amount demanded by Johnson, and Woodman is too old a bird in the managerial game to place himself in a false position by misstating the facts.

In the meantime Hugh McIntosh of Australia thinks that a 20 round go between Jack Johnson and Tommy Burns will be a highly attractive event over in England. Burns is eager for the test and Johnson has promised him the first chance, so it looks as if Tommy and Jack will get together.

For Summer Days

By Katherine Patterson Rice

IN this illustration is shown a most artistic gown, after a Parisian model, for afternoon and evening wear. It would be charming done in either silk or a cotton fabric and trimmed with wide embroidered bands. The Princess tunic pictured here is particularly smart, and an unusual touch is given by the portions of vertical tucking which is also used as trimming. In the back view the tucking is of plain white, thus making a pretty contrast to the figured material of the gown. Very modish is the effective use of the black and white bands. In this model a choice of sleeves may be made. Those puffed at the elbow with the bell-shaped over-sleeve or the plain tucked. A simulated girdle joins the tunic in front at the waist-line.

A Helpful Page for the Housewife

Making A Hammock At Home

By Ellen Wise.

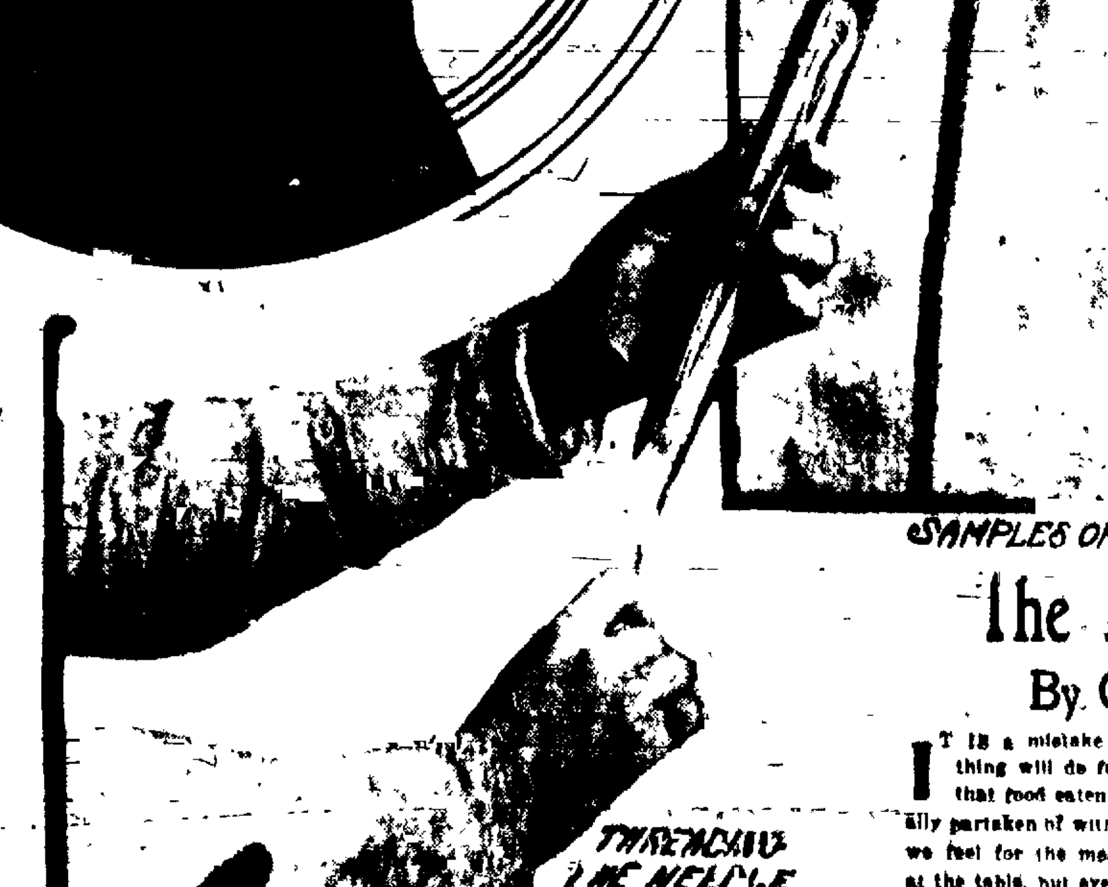

SOLID COMFORT FOR THIRTY CENTS

CONTINUING THE LOOPS

SAMPLES OF KNOTS USED

THREADING THE NEEDLE

THE MATERIAL

YOU can have a perfectly good, serviceable hammock for the price of a ball of twine, one which you can roll up and carry in a valise if you are going in the country for a day, or it can be packed in a corner of the lunch basket without crowding the eatables.

The tools required are shown in the illustrations on this page. They can be made by any one in ten minutes. Or you can get along very well with improvised tools if you don't want to go to the trouble of making the conventional kind of "needle" for the purpose.

The hammock needle, as can be seen by the picture, is merely a thin piece of wood, rounded at the end to a point for convenience in slipping the meshes of the hammock. By cutting out a section of the wood, leaving a centerpiece, a place is left for the twine to be wound in the operation that may be called "threading the needle." To hold the twine in place when wound around the middle the end opposite the rounded point is cleft, the two side pieces holding the twine from slipping off. As it is well to wind a lot of the twine on the needle it is desirable to have the cleft in the needle deep enough to hold a quantity of the material used in weaving.

When you have the needle threaded you can begin work. Get a heavy piece of wood like that seen in the illustration. This is the stick on which you tie the first knot. Any kind of stick will do. Take two turns around this stick with the twine and tie a square knot. Then take another end of the string and tie this in the loop of the string that comes off the stick.

With this beginning, continue putting the needle through the loop, make a loop around the stick and tie it. It is, of course, necessary to have the loops the same size. This is regulated by the stick around which the loops are made. Therefore, as the size of the stick regulates the size of the mesh it is advisable to select a stick that will give you a mesh of the size you think the hammock should be.

Continue making loops until you have eighty stitches. Then hang the work that you have so far done on a nail on the wall, by a corner of the mesh. This is to enable you to work with the assurance that the string is being looped on the same side all the way down and not twisted, as might be the case were you to allow the growing hammock to gather on the floor while you are working. Then knit across to the width you want the hammock to be, turn it over and knit across again.

There is one great advantage that this kind of hammock has over the more elaborate porch hammocks that are sold at the stores; it is an ideal crib for the baby in the summer weather. Suspended on the porch or between two trees outdoors, the home-made hammock is a cool resting place for a child and the swing of it is soothing and sleep-producing. But the best of it is the baby cannot possibly fall out, for the hammock can be tied at the top and there lies the child in a bag of twine, in the very embrace of any breeze that may be stirring, unencumbered by hot, stuffy bedding and, if a mosquito netting be wrapped around the hammock, safe from any insect pest that may be lurking for mischief in that vicinity.

The Picnic Lunch Basket

By Christine Terhune Herrick

IT IS a mistake to think that anything will do for a picnic. I grant that food eaten out-of-doors is usually partaken of with more appetite than we feel for the meals regularly served at the table, but even so, there is something distinctly hostile to the inclination for food to see the items on the picnic bill of fare carelessly put up, as well as to find that they are poorly made.

This matter of putting up the food deserves more care than it always gets. In these days when one can buy any quantity of oiled or waxed paper for an inconsiderable sum—you could put up sandwiches for a party of ten with five cents' worth of waxed paper there is no reason why we should have dried out bread at our picnics or should resort to ordinary and unattractive wrapping paper for our parcels of food.

So when you are planning for your picnic lay in a stock of waxed paper in advance and when you have cut your sandwiches wrap two or three together in the waxed paper. Shell your hard-boiled eggs and wrap them in the same sort of paper, and use it for your cakes, if these are not iced. Do not pack the sandwiches too closely in the baskets, so that they will mash together, and put nothing heavy on top of them. If you carry wooden plates and these are far better than crockery, unless you are going in a carriage or boat—put these at the bottom of the basket, the sandwiches or cake above these and the paper napkins on top of all. Let the glasses or drinking cups go in another basket or be distributed, one or two in each basket.

Care should be exercised in packing the picnic baskets that the weight is scattered, so that one carrier does not have a heavy burden, while another goes almost free of a load. Medium sized baskets are better than those of too large size. Line the baskets with white or brown wrapping paper, and even if you carry paper napkins, take one or two or more old damask napkins with you. If you mean to spread a tablecloth it is an advantage to have an old railway rug or something of the kind along, to lay down as a foundation for the cloth. It should be something old, which will not be injured if anything is spilled upon it, but it should be reasonably clean. A half unpleasant recollection lingers with me of one picnic meal, flavored with the odor of the stable, through a well-meaning, but stupid boy, having brought—and used—a horse blanket to lay under the picnic tablecloth.

It is difficult to get ready for a picnic in too much of a hurry, unless there are many hands to assist in the preparation and plenty of provisions of the right sort in the house. The bread for sandwiches must not be too fresh and it is less pleasing to the taste if it is not too stale. Bread a day old cuts well and if thin slices are desired, the butter should be spread on the bread before this is cut. A story was told me the other day of a thrifty housekeeper, who used a pastry brush for buttering sandwiches in quantity. The bread was cut into slices and these laid on the table and melted butter was then "slathered" on them with a pastry brush. That might do for a lot of hungry boys—but the method could not be accused of daintiness.

Have a sharp knife to cut your bread, and soften the butter a little before you use it. Don't melt it or put it over the stove, but leave it in the warm room for a half hour or so before it will be needed, and it will probably be of a consistency to spread well. Some housekeepers cut all the crust from sandwiches and they are more dainty in this way, to be served for afternoon tea. But most persons like the crisp, upper and side crust of the bread and, for their sakes, you may leave the slices untrimmed. As they are buttered you may pile them to one side or turn them over to someone else for the filling. Two persons work to better advantage than one.

There seems no end to the filling for sandwiches. Only a very limited imagination will be contented with the old ham and tongue sandwiches. Do we not all recollect how difficult it was to eat them [illegible]? The ham and the bread never bit in two in the same place! The ignominious experience of having a large piece of meat come away from the bread does not readily leave the minds of those who have ever known it.

The plan of chopping the meat to be used for sandwiches has done away with all that. The meat need not be ground to a paste if it is it seems to lose much of its character, but chopped into little pieces and blended to a paste with melted butter or with mayonnaise dressing. Nearly all meats are improved by being submitted to this process. They taste better and may be varied by the addition of any seasoning. Celery salt added to chopped chicken [illegible] or a little of the fresh celery [illegible] with the chicken, produces the effect of a chicken salad sandwich. Lobster and salmon are especially good when softened with mayonnaise. Sardines usually do not need the addition of dressing of any sort, but a few drops of lemon juice worked into them improve them. Cream cheese sandwiches may have a few nut meats chopped with them or minced olives may be added to them. Sandwiches spread with mayonnaise dressing rather liberally salted, may have slices of radishes laid between the two pieces of bread. A little pickle, finely minced, is a pleasing addition to the sardine sandwiches or to the cream cheese sandwiches, while hard boiled eggs, chopped very fine and mingled with either butter or mayonnaise make an excellent and nourishing sandwich.

Of course, there are all sorts of other sandwiches, containing lettuce, tomato, cucumbers, etc., which are very good, but they are not desirable for the picnic basket. The green things wither and toughen if kept too long and their moisture makes the bread about them soggy and unpleasant. Sweet sandwiches are dainty and excellent, and are better for children than any, to say nothing of the fact that they are usually cheaper. Jam may be used to spread upon the buttered bread, or jelly or orange marmalade, or grated maple sugar. This is especially good if stirred into thick cream or cream cheese. Children often relish apple sauce sandwiches. For these cut bread thick.

I have spoken of egg sandwiches. Some persons prefer these to the hard boiled eggs, but if the latter are wished, shell them and wrap them in waxed paper. The well-known deviled eggs are also popular for picnics. The yolks [illegible] smooth with butter, salt and pepper, perhaps with a little chopped [illegible] for those who like [illegible] with a few grains of cayenne. Or grated cheese [illegible] the proportion of [illegible] to a yolk may be put in [illegible] the seasoning the yolk mixture [illegible] wards made into balls and returned to its place in the halved whites, the two put together and waxed paper twisted at the ends, twisted around the egg to hold the severed halves together.

HANDS AND HOUSEWORK

When working about the house, dishwashing, scrubbing and so on, protect the hands with rubber gloves. If you are going camping and must take your part in work about the camp be sure to include in your kit a pair of these gloves, at the risk of being thought vain.

When the hands must be put much into strong soapy water add a little salt to the last rinsing water; it will take away the harsh rough feeling and tends to keep softer skin.

Bathing the hands in a little vinegar and water when they are wrinkled from much dishwashing or amateur laundry work will quickly restore their normal condition.

Keep pumice stone in the kitchen and use it on the hands after hulling fruits that stain.

For constant dishwashing it pays to use a pure soap for the sake of the hands. Lemon soap agrees with most skins and also quickly cuts greasy and dirt [illegible] the labor of keeping silver, glass and china clean.

Cold Dishes for Hot Days

By Marion Harris Neil, M. C. A.

NOW that the warm weather is coming, cold dishes make a pleasant change. In many homes the [illegible] only the [illegible] of cold meat, [illegible] boiled ham, that is, judging by the fact that no other variety [illegible] the table, and these are [illegible] all the year round, but more especially during the hot weather, when a cold dish, something which needs no heating or cooking at the last minute, is simply invaluable. Here are some recipes for dishes that are very popular, perhaps because they are a little out of the ordinary.

Gooseberry Trifle.

One quart of gooseberries, half a pound of brown sugar, one cupful of custard, slices of stale sponge cake, one cupful of whipped cream, half an ounce of pistachio nuts. Top and tail the gooseberries, then wash them. Put them in a stone jar with the sugar and let them cook slowly until tender and soft. Arrange the slices of sponge cake in a glass dish, pour over the fruit, then the custard, and leave until cold. Whip up the cream until it will just hang on the whisk, sweeten and flavor it carefully, then heap it up roughly on the custard. Put the pistachio nuts in boiling water for three or four minutes, then shell and shred them and sprinkle them over the cream. This is a good trifle, but should you require something cheaper, it is easy to either omit the cream altogether or use half the quantity and add to it the stiffly beaten whites of the eggs. Also you can, if you like, leave out the pistachio nuts. It makes a good pudding without either of these.

[illegible] Sausage.

One pound of lean steak, half a pound of fat bacon, one cupful of fine bread crumbs, one tablespoonful of mushroom catsup, one egg, one teaspoonful of salt, half a teaspoonful of white pepper, quarter teaspoonful of red pepper and a little mustard.

The steak and bacon to be very finely chopped; then add the bread crumbs and other ingredients, and lastly the egg, well beaten. Form all into a roll, not too long, and boil in a floured cloth tied at the ends, not too tightly, in boiling water for two hours. When done glaze it while hot with buttered browned bread crumbs, and leave till cold. Serve thinly sliced.

Veal Loaf.

Chop four pounds of uncooked veal very finely; add to it half a teaspoonful each of white pepper, salt, powdered sage, allspice, and onion juice, one cupful of fine bread crumbs or cracker crumbs, three eggs well beaten, mix thoroughly and press into a buttered square baking pan.

When molded turn it in a baking dish, brush it over with well beaten egg, and bake in a moderate oven for three hours, basting often with melted butter. When done allow it to get cold. Serve sliced thinly. This recipe will also answer for beef and chicken loaf. For the latter use two chickens weighing four pounds each; the meat, after it is removed from the carcass, will not be greater in weight than the veal.

Canapes of Anchovies.

Twelve boned anchovies, two hard boiled yolks of eggs, one heaping tablespoonful of butter, dust of red pepper, one tablespoonful finely chopped parsley, one hard-boiled egg for decoration. Pound the anchovies and yolks of eggs to a smooth paste, mix in the butter and red pepper.

[illegible] rounds of fried bread [illegible] with the white of egg, finely chopped, the yolk rubbed through a sieve and the parsley. Color half the [illegible] with a few drops of red [illegible] shape three colors [illegible] on top of each, and serve cold.

Ham Relish.

[illegible] a pound of cooked cold ham and six mushrooms, chop each separately. Put two hard boiled yolks of eggs into a clean saucepan, rub with a wooden spoon till smooth and add gradually one gill of whipped cream; chop the white of the hard cooked egg finely and add half of it, with the ham and mushrooms to the cream.

Stir over the fire until hot, season with pepper and a pinch of paprika, then add one tablespoonful of white sauce. Spread the mixture on buttered toast cut into neat pieces. Sprinkle over with the remainder of chopped white of egg and finely chopped parsley. Serve cold.

Lobster Mayonnaise.

One boiled lobster, three hard boiled eggs, one small beet, a bunch of watercress, two lettuces, mayonnaise sauce. Carefully wash and prepare the salad. Cut the flesh of the lobster into pieces convenient to eat with a fork. Put the feelers and lobster coral on one side. Mix the pieces of lobster with the salad, arranging it in a salad bowl with the [illegible].

Garnish the salad with these, arranging the colors to blend as prettily as possible. Arrange some of the reddest pieces of the claws in the center, with the feelers and a few [illegible] pieces of endive. Hand the mayonnaise sauce separately, unless it is poured over the salad just at serving.

Work and Play for the Idle Hour

DRAWN BY SARAH HALL HUNTER

If the material used is [illegible] sheer the easiest way is to lay it over the design, which will show through plainly, and draw over each line with a hard, sharp pencil. If your linen is heavy, buy a piece of impression paper, the kind that does not rub off, lay it on your material, place the design over it and trace with a hard pencil. You will find the design neatly transferred and ready to be embroidered.

In transferring a design when only one part is given fold your linen so that the two right sides come together. Between these two sides insert two pieces of the impression paper, placing the wrong sides of paper toward each other, then place your design on the folded material and draw each line thinly with a hard sharp pencil.

A scallop of the centerpiece should first be padded and then closely buttonholed.

The dots may be worked solid or as eyelets, and the [illegible] leaves solid. The stems should be done in the outline stitch. Use mercerized cotton No. 25 for the embroidery.

MISS HUNTER'S CORRESPONDENCE

PAULINE: A gathering is made with small running stitches using a double or extra strong single thread, knotted, as the material should be gathered very closely together and a fine thread might break. Draw the material to the end of the knot and fasten it on the wrong side, after which stroke the gathers gently with the eye of the needle to make them smooth and regular.

Two rows of gathers will allow the material to fall more gracefully, and if the stitches are kept the same size and on an even line, the effect will be much better. [illegible] always [illegible] prettier gathers.

Embroidering.

C. V. Q.:—The [illegible] you [illegible] for are too long to put in the paper. You can get a [illegible] book on the subject, which will give you these and many other directions, at the art-needle work counters of the large department shops.

Waist Band.

Mary M.:—The waist band of a skirt may be put on before the skirt is finished at the bottom, as it helps one to hang the skirt more correctly. The band is cut on a straight piece of the material along the selvedge edge, about three inches wide, and turned over to make a double band.

Divide it in half and fasten the center in the middle of the front gore of the skirt. Baste it on, holding the skirt next to you, and allow a very little fullness to make it fit easier over the hips, sew it on the machine, then turn it over on the wrong side and baste it again before [illegible] with [illegible].

Pique Hat.

Mrs B.:—A small girl will look charming in a pique hat made with a border of rather deep square scallops, in each of which is embroidered a small pink [illegible] with green leaves. The crown of the hat is made to button on with small pearl buttons. It is also [illegible] the square scallops, with a [illegible] bud in each. After the scallops have been embroidered the hat is faced with pique, and the scallops worked through both. A pink ribbon rosette can be placed on one side, making a dainty finish to the hat.

Powder Box Cover.

Violet:—A box of violet talcum powder can be made very dainty by covering it with a piece of fancy ribbon. A white or white ground [illegible] violets might be selected, as suitable for the box. It should fit closely to the box and the edges are turned under and whipped together with fine stitches.

A pretty finish would be to tie it top and bottom with narrow violet ribbon. The top of the box will have to be left uncovered to allow the powder to come through.

Shirtwaist.

To Mrs E. L.:—I will gladly give a pattern for a shirt waist to be done in coronation braid as soon as there is space for it. I am delighted that you [illegible] the paper so much.

Shirring.

[illegible]:—When shirring is done over a fine cord the different rows should be marked with a fine basting thread to keep them straight, and the material not drawn up until all the lines for shirring are run.

Do not take any back stitches in this work as then the threads [illegible] drawn up. Draw them gently so as not to displace the stitches, which should be evenly distributed. If the pattern allows only for plain shirring, an additional allowance must be made in cutting sufficient to cover each row of cord. This amount is about the [illegible] of a similar tuck.

Stamping.

Elsie.—You can get a stamping outfit quite reasonably, and also the perforated patterns. These are bought separately, and do not come with the outfit, which consists of a powder and a box of [illegible].

Loop.

[illegible]:—A [illegible] loop [illegible] is made on a garment instead of an eye is [illegible] by [illegible] first a bar of two or three stitches the desired length opposite the hook. The thread is then held down by the left thumb and the needle put, eye first, under the bar and over the loop stitches.

The thread is then drawn tight forming a purl on the outer edge. It is just like the buttonhole stitch, only caught over the loose threads and not in the material. Keep the stitch as even as possible, and at the end fasten it securely on the wrong side.

Exchanges.

Mrs. S. Y. S.:—There are exchanges for woman's work in most of the large cities. You had better write for a list of regulations [illegible] you have decided to which exchange you wish to belong to.

Slippers.

Mrs C. H. T.—Little slippers of wash material are cool and comfortable for the baby during the warm weather. Pique can be used lined with flannel. Bind the edges with narrow bias band of thin linen or lawn so that a seam will not be necessary, which is likely to rub the baby's tender flesh.

The outside and lining are seamed separately and basted together, and then bound with the bias folds.

The soles may be cut from two thicknesses of heavy linen and bound to the upper part with the bias folds. Little ankle straps are [illegible] fastened with a pearl button. A rosette of baby ribbon on the strap and toe will be sufficient decoration.

Pretty Crochet Scarf

WHITE zephyr floss and pink 2 fold saxony were combined in this scarf. To make it 3 oz. of zephyr floss and 2 oz. saxony and a celluloid crochet hook No. 4 are required. Shetland floss may be substituted.

Ch means chain; d c means double crochet; s c means single crochet. With the floss make a loose chain 60 inches long, turn. First row. In 3d stitch from hook make a shell of 3 d c. X skip 1 ch, 1 s c in next stitch, skip 1 ch, 3 d c in next stitch. Repeat from X to end of row, ending with 1 s c. Break yarn.

Second Row. Fasten yarn in loop formed by 3 ch at beginning of previous row, 1 s c in same place, X make a d c by putting yarn over hook, insert hook under center stitch of shell in previous row, draw up a loop, work off, make 2 more d c in the same place, 1 s c in top of next s c taking both loops at top of stitch. Repeat from X to end of row. Break yarn.

Fifth row: X 1 s c in center ch stitch between 2 s c in previous row, ch 3, 1 s c in same place. Repeat [illegible] X to end of row. Break yarn.

Now fasten the saxony at beginning of last floss stripe, work across as in fourth row, then work across narrow edge of scarf by making 1 s c ch 3 1 s c in the end stitch of each floss row, and in the loop of ch 3 at the beginning of the 2d saxony row. In working across other long edge of scarf make 1 s c, ch 3, 1 s c in the ch stitch at each side of the shell, work across the other short edge. Break yarn. It would be well to put an extra group in each corner. Now in loop of ch 3 at the beginning of first short edge fasten floss, ch 6, make 2 d c in same place drawing the stitches about an inch long. X 3 d c in loop of next ch 3. Repeat from X across both short edges and one long edge. Break yarn.

Fasten floss in first loop of ch 3 of previous row ch 3, 2 d c in same place, X 1 d c in next loop of ch 3, 3 d c in next loop. Repeat from X to end of row. Break yarn.

Dainty Baby Pillow

A dainty baby pillow that can be made with little work, is cut from dotted swiss to fit an oblong pillow about fourteen by ten inches. This is covered with pink, blue or pale green satin.

Each end and around the corners to the edge of pillow is marked with a small scallop and worked in buttonholing stitch in white mercerized cotton or in a [illegible] to [illegible] the [illegible]. Eyelets are worked across [illegible], two inches from the scallops or where the pillow ends.

The [illegible] is [illegible] on with white baby ribbon, [illegible] a rosette of the ribbon at each of the corners, or [illegible] be tied in small bows.

This style of cover is also convenient for pique pillows that have no other trimming, but the buttonholed edge. If preferred baby's [illegible] [illegible] be worked in the center of right side.

The Rose Pie Luncheon

BY

EACH GUEST IS ASKED TO PLUCK A ROSE.

IT would be hard to find anywhere a prettier entertainment than the rose luncheon. And the rose pie is certainly a thing of beauty and, if not a joy forever, it lasts until the end of the luncheon which is all that is necessary.

In making this beautiful table decoration either natural flowers or paper roses can be used. The foundation of the center-piece is a shallow tin pan covered with green crepe paper. This is entirely concealed on the top by frills of pink crepe paper put on to look like a mammoth flat pink rose from the center of which rises a most artistic bunch of pink bridesmaids' roses and foliage with a gorgeous black and gold butterfly hovering over nearly every blossom.

SHE FINDS A DAINTY SOUVENIR ATTACHED TO THE END OF THE STEM

WHEN the luncheon is over the hostess unfastens the ribbon and asks each woman guest to pluck a rose, which she does, pulling it easily through the petals of the huge center-piece. To her surprise and delight she finds a dainty souvenir of some sort neatly wrapped in white paper, tied with pink ribbon, and attached to the end of the stem.

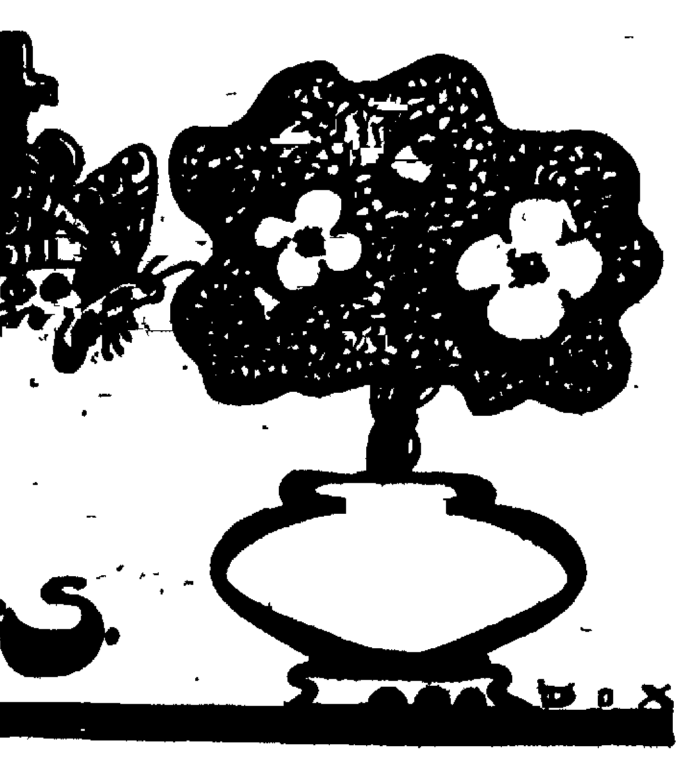

The rose pie and all its accessories can easily be made at home by a clever girl and she can have great fun by asking two of her most intimate friends to help her prepare the table decorations. Paper roses are easy to make, as their petals can be patterned directly from those of a real rose. The foliage used with them is always artificial as it is impossible to make look natural in paper.

TROUT FISHING

THE mountain streams of Colorado by reason of their clear and cold water, are particularly adapted for the various species of trout, conceded to be the gamiest fish that is caught with hook and line. To enumerate all the waters in this vicinity where trout can be taken would be to recite the name of every lake and every stream in this section. To most of these streams and lakes the public has easy access and the fisherman is sure of abundant reward for time spent. The laws of Colorado provide that trout not less than seven inches long can be taken with rod, hook and line held in the hand, from June first until October thirty-first. No license is required for either residents or nonresidents. The angler's pride in his tackle adds a hundred per cent to his anticipation and pleasure. The stranger who places himself in the hands of a reliable man such as W. T. Lucas, dealer in up-to-date tackle, sporting goods, bicycles, etc., at 119 North Tejon St., Colorado Springs, and indicates where he wishes to do his fishing, will make no mistake. Mr. Lucas is a practical fisherman, thoroughly acquainted with all varieties of fishing equipment and the trout streams of this vicinity. Phone 900.

CAVE OF THE WINDS

THE Cave of the Winds comprises 15 large rooms, connected by winding passages. The entrance is on the side of Temple Hill, and the Cave extends three-quarters of a mile underground, on a level, away from sunlight, and into the solid rock. The way is dry and easily walked. The decorations of the rooms are the unusual carbonate and onyx crystals and are astonishingly beautiful. Nature requires as in photography perfect darkness in shaping and coloring this veneer. Curtain Hall is orange and pink, Finlay Hall is amber. Majestic Hall and Bridal Chamber are pearl color while Gypsum Alcove is of the whitest virgin purity. These rare and exquisite crystals are not in small patches, but cover solidly, like the plaster of a house, every inch of ceiling and walls. No Cave in the world is better lighted. The impression upon visitors who view this "Studio of Nature" with the aid of our two thousand candlepower electric lights, will remain vividly in memory the balance of their lives. The famous "Temple Drive" in Williams Canon, which is free to the public, is our carriage road to the Cave of the Winds and a more beautiful drive would be hard to find. Ask your gentlemanly hotel clerk for our other literature.

GARDEN OF THE GODS

OF ALL the points of interest in the Pikes Peak region, the Garden of the Gods is probably the most noted and [illegible] visited. It is situated about five miles northwest of Colorado Springs, and can be reached with carriage by two routes—over the Mesa Road across the plateau to the west of Colorado Springs or by Colorado Avenue to Colorado City and thence north on West Third Street. The Garden consists principally of red, white and gray standstone, limestone and gypsum. The red walls rise perpendicularly hundreds of feet, some resembling great church steeples called the Cathedral Spires and Three Graces, these with other standing walls form the Temple of Montezuma. This wonder is owned and maintained as a Public Park by Colorado Springs and a pavilion at the principal view point supplies refreshments, lunches, curios, souvenirs, etc., as well as an expert photographer with guaranteed ability. At the Gateway is Echo Cave, cleft into this huge red sandstone formation with a ceiling over 70 feet high, and on the opposite side the wonderful change to snow white alabaster and gypsum stone. Genuine souvenirs are carved of this stone, only at the Gateway Pavilion, and the artist is proud to show these and the statues carved here. Two or three hours is ample time to make the trip by carriage or automobile.

THE HIGH DRIVE

FROM east to west through the whole of the United States, the famous High Drive, built by the late Gen. William J. Palmer, is known as one of the most attractive in the world and every summer thousands of tourists make this trip. The favorite way to make the High Drive trip is in carriages which may be taken from Colorado Springs or Colorado City, but those who are fond of riding, find the trip an ideal one for an outing on horseback. Lunches and souvenirs may be obtained at Ruin Inn. The drive may be made either by going through Colorado City and entering from the Bear Creek canon side, or by going from Colorado Springs through Ivywild and Broadmoor past Stratton Park and returning by Colorado City. Along the High Drive are many wonderful views of mountain scenery and from the highest point a magnificent stretch of scenery is open to the [illegible]. Glimpses can also be seen of the famous Short Line track as it [illegible] its way [illegible] around the mountain [illegible] and at every turn a new and delightful prospect [illegible] itself before the [illegible]. The road throughout is one of the [illegible] built in the country.

WILD FLOWER EXCURSIONS

FOR several years during the summer season, it has been the custom of the Colorado Midland Railroad to run special trains into the mountains, known as Wild Flower excursions. The idea is a capital one and has met with the hearty approval of both the tourist and the Coloradoan. The trip takes one through the historic Ute Pass, passing through Manitou at quite an elevation, thus giving one an excellent panoramic view of that town, through a series of seven tunnels in the next three miles, past the beautiful summer resorts of Cascade and Green Mountain Falls and Woodland Park, thence to Lake George on the Platte river, a stream noted for its excellent trout fishing, Eleven Mile canon, one of the grandest scenic spots in the Rockies and on into South Park. This is the end of the trip of over 50 miles. On the return trip, numerous stops are made giving the passengers ample time to leave the train and gather the beautiful wild flowers which grow in abundance adjacent to the track, such as the Columbine, [illegible] Lily, Indian Pinks and others peculiar to the Rockies. Further information as to rates and dates is cheerfully furnished at [illegible] Midland city ticket office.

BALANCED ROCK

SOUVENIR photographs are always appreciated by the folks and friends at home and the best memento of your trip through the Garden of the Gods is a photograph of yourself taken by the side of the wonderful Balanced Rock, either on a burro, carriage, automobile or afoot. The entire western territory of the Garden of the Gods, from and including the Balanced Rock to the car line known as "Mushroom Park," is owned exclusively by Goerke and Son, who are pioneers in this district, and having a reputation for the past 20 years as the most artistic photographers in this state, their work is unquestionably bound to be the best in every respect, both as to workmanship and material used. Upon arriving at the Balanced Rock one should not fail to ascend to the deck of Steamboat Rock and view the summit of Pikes Peak and the Kissing Camels at the Gateway through the powerful telescopes provided by Goerke and Son for the free use of the tourists. A short distance from the Balanced Rock will be found their curio shop, and if in search of any oddities an excellent assortment to chose from can be found here at most reasonable prices. No admission is charged to the Garden.

THE SKY LINE DRIVE, CANON CITY

CANON CITY, Colorado, at the mouth of the famous ROYAL GORGE, offers attractions to tourists not surpassed anywhere; a short and pleasant trip from Colorado Springs by either the Denver and Rio Grande or Santa Fe Railroad; also accessible by an excellent automobile roadway, a three hour drive through magnificent mountain and canon scenery. Any amount of time from a few hours to several weeks can be profitably spent viewing the many scenic points of interest in and about Canon City, notable of which are the beautiful SKY LINE DRIVE, the SUMMIT of the world famed ROYAL GORGE, the Ute Burying Ground and Temple Canon. Thousands of acres of fruit bearing trees surround this, the gem city of the Arkansas Valley, and present a sight long to be remembered. Cheap summer rates are advertised from Denver, Colorado Springs, Manitou and Pueblo, the regular week end round trip rate from Colorado Springs being but $2.50; weekly excursions through the Royal Gorge [illegible] from three to four hours in Canon City. Most Colorado tourist tickets read through to Pueblo, from which point Canon City is only [illegible] miles distant. All through tickets to Salt Lake City or the Pacific Coast are good for stop-over privileges at Canon City. Handsome descriptive literature may be obtained at any hotel or railroad office. For full particulars address H. S. Maddox, Secretary Canon City Business Men's Association, Canon City, Colorado.

THE ROYAL GORGE

THE crowning [illegible] of [illegible] the masterpieces of nature is that of the Royal Gorge [illegible] among all canons of Colorado, situated on the line of the Denver & Rio Grande between Canon City and Salida [illegible] the front range of the Rockies, it is the most spectacular, awe inspiring and magnificent. Down this cleft in the heart of the granite rock battler rush the waters of the Arkansas, lashed into fury and dashed into spray by its swift descent through the tortuous defile. So narrow is the passage at one point that there was not room for both road and river, and therefore a curiously constructed bridge of steel had to be thrown lengthwise of the stream, suspended from iron supports mortised into the canon walls on each side. And right here can be seen the climax of all the canon's grandeur. That which has been aptly called "The Royal Gorge," [illegible] feet solid monoliths [illegible] ward, five times as lofty as the Washington monument. No words can adequately describe the magnificence of the scene. Only those who behold its glories can appreciate them. For excursion dates and rates, see Rio Grande ticket office, 16 N. Tejon St.

The Mt. Manitou Scenic Incline

EVERY visitor to the Pikes Peak region makes inquiry regarding the white gash cut in the mountain side just west of Manitou. This conspicuous landmark defines the course of the Mount Manitou Scenic Incline, which is the longest and greatest railway of its kind in the world. It is a cable road one and one-quarter miles in length, ascending the east slope of Mount Manitou to its summit, rising to an elevation of one half mile above the lower pavilion which is located 150 feet west of the world famous Ute Iron Springs of Manitou. The one feature especially aimed at in the construction is absolute safety, and this has been attained. The magnificent panoramic view obtained from the car while making the ascent is not excelled anywhere on the globe. Ten thousand square miles of plains, mountains and forests lie within the range of vision. Upon the summit of Mount Manitou is situated delightful Mount Manitou Park, covered with most beautiful evergreen trees of many kinds. Along and above the trees tower granite boulders and crags hundreds of feet in height. This beautiful natural park, with its entrancing views and its superb location, 9,500 feet above sea level, is an ideal spot for recreation. Twenty-five thousand people took this trip last season.

MAKE YOUR OWN VIEWS

WHY not have your own souvenirs of the Pikes Peak region? You can buy local views of the scenery around Pikes Peak made by professional photographers, at almost any book store in Colorado Springs but these views embrace only the prominent points of scenic interest, and do not cover a great many just as beautiful views, which you happen to see with your own eyes, and which may probably strike you as more picturesque than the more celebrated objects such as the Balanced Rock and the Seven Falls. Then too, these views lack the personal element, the group of your own friends, the children on burros, the picnic lunch in canon. You can have these personal souvenirs by taking a kodak with you and, if you take your films to the Weeks Studio, [illegible] East Bijou street in the afternoon you can have your pictures ready for you the following afternoon and you can be fitted out there with all the photographic supplies you need.

MUSIC AND DANCING

AMONG the most popular attractions in this city offered residents and visitors are the free band concerts and free dances at Stratton park pavilion. The concerts by the Colorado Midland band, one of the most noted musical organizations in the country, are given on Tuesday, Thursday and Sunday evenings of each week, and on each Sunday afternoon. Classic and popular music are happily blended in the programs. The popularity of these concerts is attested by the vast crowds attending them. Equally popular are the free dances given in Stratton park pavilion on Monday, Wednesday and Friday evenings of each week. The dancing floor is one of the [illegible] the country, and the music the very best [illegible] which are attested by all who have attended the dances. [illegible] dances are free to the public, the only requirement being to secure a season admission card at the general office of the Street Railway company. It is by means of these season cards that the excellent order and high class of patronage is maintained. Another feature, and one of particular appeal to the little ones, [illegible] by the street railway [illegible] There are swings, [illegible] and [illegible] for making the tots happy.

TROUT FISHING

COLORADO'S famous trout streams that are fairly alive with the best of game fish, the lusty trout, are beckoning to you from various points along the Colorado Midland Railway to spend a few cooling, recuperative days on their banks. At this season of the year the speckled brook trout have left their spawning beds and are voraciously hungry and will rise to the lure of the fly or the glitter of a spoon. Good catches are being made daily from the small but game speckled trout to the five to seven-pound rainbow and the ten to fifteen and eight [illegible] pound mackinaw. Among the many points of easy access located along the Colorado Midland Railway is Hartsel, on the South Platte, Twin Lakes, the Frying Pan river, at Nast, Thomasville, Ruedi, and the Roaring Fork river, at Basalt, and lastly, at the famous Woods Lake resort near Thomasville, acknowledged to be the best for both lake and stream fishing in Colorado. The Midland Route publishes a booklet on hunting, fishing and camping, [illegible] point in detail, which can be had at their office, at 9 North [illegible].

MANITOU SODA BATHS

ONE of the chief attractions of Manitou is its famous mineral springs, and the wonderful medicinal values which they possess. One can get the benefit of their properties by drinking and bathing in their healing waters. A large and commodious bath house has been built, equipped with all facilities for giving every known variety of baths—tub, shower, plunge, etc., with experienced attendants for either ladies or gentlemen. Plunge parties are quite the popular thing this summer. Can you imagine anything more exhilarating and refreshing after a hard day's climb in hills than a plunge into these mineral laden waters? They instill vigor and new life into the whole body. "It makes one feel good all over," are words that express the thorough appreciation of all patrons of these baths. An hour's enjoyment of this health-giving pastime will make you realise that they are worth any number of doctors' prescriptions. Ladies and gentlemen, young and old, also children, receive the same courteous attention of the management and its employes. A 20-minute ride from Colorado Springs will bring you to the Manitou Bath House.

Pikes Peak and the Cog Road

PIKES PEAK is the landmark of the Rockies and one of their chief attractions. It stands at an elevation of 14,147 feet above sea level and over 8,000 feet above Colorado Springs. Ascent is made by the famous "Cog Road," an example of modern enterprise and engineering skill. At a cost of nearly a million dollars this road with an average grade of 846 feet to the mile, has been built to its summit. Comfortably seated in an observation car you are pushed slowly up this nine miles of stairway, until you have reached one of the highest eminences on the globe. Above the earth, above the clouds, only the sky overhead, all the world beneath. Around you an unobstructed view limited by the bounds of vision. On the west lie the vast Cordilleras, on the east the plains, on the south appear sharp points of the Spanish Peaks. To the north is Long's Peak, Gray's Peak and the Continental Divide. It is an inspiration, a sight that none forget. The trains leave the Manitou station on the following schedule: 8:35 a. m., returning at 1:13 and 1:30 p. m., returning at 5.15 p. m. Tickets at any of the railroad ticket offices.

South Cheyenne Canon and Seven Falls

SITUATED three and one half miles southwest of Colorado Springs, is South Cheyenne Canon, wherein are located the famous Seven Falls, a name synonymous with "Colorado" and all that is eminent in a scenic line. Its accessibility and pre-eminence over other local attractions make it easily among one of the first to be visited by the tourist. From the entrance of South Cheyenne Canon to the Seven Falls is a distance of one mile, and unquestionably is the grandest one mile in Colorado. If your time is not limited take the Stairway or the Burro Trail leading to the top of Seven Falls, where the Canon opens into a beautiful valley with numerous waterfalls, thus perfecting your view of this tremendous gorge. From the top of Seven Falls are trails leading to Helen Hunt's Grave, Observatory Point and Inspiration Point, which places should be [illegible] by the sightseer. South Cheyenne Canon can be reached by [illegible] car or carriage from street car terminus. [illegible] carriage or burros can be obtained for the round trip [illegible] Cheyenne Burro and Carriage company, or the [illegible] company.

NORTH CHEYENNE CANON

AMONG the famous scenic drives in Colorado is North Cheyenne Canon, which can be reached by carriages or burros from the end of the street car line at Stratton park. One of the beautiful features about the drive is that it runs for miles beside the bright, dashing stream that pursues its precipitous course from the cool caverns of the mountains above. In many places along the stream are spectacular falls, where the water dashes over the rocks, making a scene of striking beauty with its background of dark green formed by the luxuriant foliage of the hill sides. On a hot day the canon is a wonderfully cool retreat for in the precipitous gorges, with rocks towering hundreds of feet overhead, the sun scarcely penetrates. No one who desires to see all the sights of the Pikes Peak region can afford to miss this most spectacular drive. The falls in North Cheyenne Canon are among the most beautiful in the state and the scene at the top of the canon is equal to anything in this district.

It is an attraction in itself because it affords the patron a most delightful outing of two hours' duration in one of those famous [illegible] cars that have a charm for everyone and it takes one to all of the other attractions, and enables both the stranger with [illegible] and the one whose time is limited to see those attractions under the most favorable circumstances. The scope of the trip can be realised by simply stating that with a start from the Old Postoffice Building on Pikes Peak avenue, it embraces all of the interesting features to be found between that point and Manitou on the West—Cheyenne Canon and Stratton Park on the South—and the residence part of the City on the North. The car is in charge of Mr. Grant Collins, one of the most competent guides to be found anywhere, and one of the greatest pleasures is the interesting lecture delivered by him on each trip. The car leaves the Old Postoffice at 9:00 a. m. and 1:30 p. m., daily. ## AUTOMOBILING

MANY of the most beautiful spots in this vicinity are far from car lines and can be reached only by carriage or automobile. And of these a large number are even too distant to be accessible by horse unless several days are devoted to the trip. Among these may be mentioned Dead Man's Canon and Manitou Park, two of the most interesting and magnificent places in the Rocky Mountains. With a good car these drives can be made in a few hours. On a trip like these, however, it is not only absolutely necessary that the car be perfectly reliable, to avoid disagreeable delays, but also that the drivers be experienced and thoroughly informed as to the roads. "Northern Lights" will have its first production in this city at the Opera House Monday evening. There will be a souvenir matinee Wednesday afternoon of this play.

Thursday, 'The Squaw Man.' One of the best western dramas ever written. 'The Squaw Man' will be produced at the Opera House Thursday evening by the Lorch Stock company with Mr Lorch in the leading role, a part to which he is unusually well suited. A beautiful stage production will be made of 'The Squaw Man.' There will be a matinee Saturday.

Majestic Theater—Commencing Monday matinee and all week, Sullivan and Considine imperial vaudeville. Vaudeville's greatest animal act, Little Hip, cleverest elephant in the world. Billy Ellwood, 'The Jolly Tar,' in original diversions. The incomparable pair, Wood and Lawson, a meritorious concoction of songs and dances. Sylvia Landis, a singer of merit. Chas Nelson Haight, Laura Dean and Company in the funny farcical sketch, 'A Misfit Meeting.' Majestiscope, a thousand feet of animation. Majestic Concert Orchestra.

What the Press Agents Say

"NORTHERN LIGHTS"—"THE SQUAW MAN"

Two important productions will mark the sixth week of the summer season, now being played at the Opera House by Theodore Lorch. The first of these, which will be presented tomorrow evening, and the following two nights with a Wednesday matinee, is the great military spectacle, "Northern Lights," which has as the basis of its plot the story of Custer's campaign in the west, using his historic stand in Wyoming as the climax of the drama. An entire army of soldiers is used in this play, and a sham battle is fought on the stage.

"The Squaw Man" will be presented Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings and Saturday matinee. "The Squaw Man" was first presented in this country by William Faversham, who was also seen in the play in this city three or four years ago. Mr Lorch will appear in Faversham's old role, a part which he portrays with his usual ease and ability. Mr. Lorch is physically well suited to such roles as the squaw man. His cowboy in "The Lieutenant and the Cowboy" is still remembered with much pleasure for its accurate picture of a real western man.

The story of "The Squaw Man" tells of an Englishman of title, James Carston, who in order to save his younger brother from ruin, leaves England and comes to this country. He goes west and takes up a ranch. Carston falls sick and a little Indian girl takes care of him. The girl is so devoted that Carston when he recovers, sees that she loves him, and he, being lonesome, and tired of being without friends or relatives, marries the squaw. For that reason he is called a squaw man. They have a little son, and soon after this boy has become six years old, Carston receives word from home that his father is dead and he is expected to come back and take care of the estate. The denouement of the drama is strong, logical and tremendously natural.

The regular Opera House prices prevail for all productions, regardless of expensive stage productions and heavy royalty bills.

PLENTY OF LIGHT COMEDY AT MAJESTIC

In the good old summertime people like light foods, light clothes, light entertainment. That is what they are giving at the Majestic—vaudeville that it requires no mental exertion to enjoy. The bill this week has been full of light comedy, and for the coming week Manager Tammen has secured another along the same lines.

The headliner though is Little Hip, the lilliputian trained elephant, who is unquestionably the most intelligent elephant alive. Little Hip is a whole show. He does pretty nearly everything that human beings do except talk, and the way he acts shows that often he tries to do that. He eats at the table, stands on his head and what not, but he shows himself to be a real comedian when he drinks a bottle of wine, becomes tipsy and goes to bed. This brings down the house.

Another of those laughable sketches like "Cheese and Crackers" is coming in the shape of "The Misfit Meeting," played by Haight, Deane and company. 'The Misfit Meeting' is one of those impossible things that are entertaining because of their very improbability, and it is so unusual that it keeps the audience on the qui vive of anticipation. A traveling man wakes up under the table in a hotel room clad in his pajamas. About that time a young lady assigned the room by mistake appears. That is a good start, but the finish is better, as you will say when you see it.

Billy Elwood, billed as "The Jolly Tar," has a clever monologue and singing act that is sure to be popular, and a very clever dancing act is that of Wood and Lawson, who have made a big hit in Denver. The fifth act, that of Sylvia Landis, the well-known soprano soloist, is a musical treat, especially enjoyable because her repertoire is suited to the season.

Besides this list there will be the usual Majestiscope pictures, which are always enjoyable, and a fine concert orchestra program under the direction of George Hackenberger, the new leader, whose [illegible] hand is already making its impression upon the quality of the orchestra's work.

Performances at 3, 7.30 and 9.10 p. m. Admission only 10, 20 and 30 cents. Do not forget that no matter how hot outside the large electric fans keep it cool and perfectly ventilated in the Majestic.

WONDERFUL CAVE OF THE WINDS—DON'T MISS IT

Have you ever traversed the 16 rooms of the Cave of the Winds? Think of it—16 large subterranean caverns, each one different from the others, and all of them abounding in the richest and most beautiful geological formations. Traveling the world over, you may pause in amazement at the wonderful achievements of man—temples and gardens, painting and sculpture, and then, within these caverns, find that which is so much more wonderful and enthralling—the unaided artistry of nature.

Your presence in Colorado offers to you an opportunity too splendid to neglect. For years the Cave of the Winds has been the marvel of geologist and traveler. That so much beauty and in so many different guises could be gathered within the bounds of a few acres seems hardly within the range of possibility until you once gaze upon it, and then you hardly believe your eyes.

THE MOOSE CARNIVAL

With the coming of the Parker shows for the benefit of the Order of the Moose a list of the attractions to be seen may be of interest to the amusement-seeking public and a short description of value to intending visitors.

There are no less than 22 separate and distinct attractions with the organization, all of which are [illegible] for by the management is [illegible] than, moral and up-to-date. In this long list there is not one that can in any way offend the most sensitive and the "seal of cleanliness," Parker's business motto, applies to all.

The free attractions are of course one of the main features of the show and appeal to all its patrons. This year Colonel Parker has exceeded his usual liberality in this respect and furnished the headliners with international reputations.

First of all comes that charming young Parisienne, "Zeletta," a young lady who created quite a furore in Paris last season at the Folies Bergeres by looping the loop in an immense sphere; then Mlle. De Onza, 'Queen of the Air,' from the Wintergarten, Berlin, does some amazing "stunts," and lastly, the famous Brothers Beldini are to be seen direct from the Teatro Urinz Alfonzo, Barcelona. These artists have been retained at an enormous salary exclusively for the Parker shows and will be seen daily rain or shine.

The trained wild animals of the aggregation are always recognized as the main feature of "big shows." This year there will be no exception to the rule and Captain Cardona has one of the best collections of denizens of the

The annex, supervised by the famous [illegible] Johnson, contains more strange and curious exhibits than any other traveling organization, and accompanied by [illegible] this noted explorer is one of the features that should not be missed.

Two exposition attractions direct from the A. Y. P. are to be seen: Pharaoh's Daughter and The Shadow of the Cross, the former being considered the masterpiece of the great illusionist, Roltaire, and the last creation of that marvelous brain before his death. It is a story of biblical history combined with Egyptian mythology, revealing the finding of the infant Moses and the sacrifice of a virgin to the waters of the Nile. It is a beautiful story tersely told, not the least interesting part of which is the explanatory story and description by Manager John A. Pollitt, who controls both attractions. The latter was one of the sensations of the exposition in Seattle and is the only miracle painting of its kind known to exist.

Mirth, melody and music will be heard in the Moulin Rouge Comedy comedy, where vaudeville of the highest class can be enjoyed. All the artists are from the large vaudeville circuits and a performance second to none can be confidently anticipated.

An educational feature that is of an exceedingly interesting nature can be seen in "The Alps." This is a cyclorama of the Swiss Tyrol and reveals the beauties of the Jungfrau, Matterhorn, Lake Geneva and the Saint Gothard Pass.

"The Bandits" is the melodramatic title of episodes that give the audience a good idea of the wild and wooly west before the days of airships and automobiles, and is accompanied with the now famous tragedy, the Johnstown flood. Both these attractions are seen under the same roof and for the one price of admission.

A family of the smallest [illegible] on earth, comprising a grandmother, mother and daughter should not be missed. These entertaining little people are highly educated and it is a [illegible] converse with them at their receptions.

Of course there are the usual amusement devices found with all organizations of this class, namely, the Ferris wheel, carousel merry-go-round, Katzenjammer Kastle, Higgeldy-Piggeldy, Carrie Nation's home, etc., and numerous other attractions that space does not permit mentioning and taken all in all, there is enough entertainment in the Parker outfit to furnish two or three evenings of fun and amusement. The local Order of the Moose are to be congratulated upon having such a sterling organization for their benefit and doubtless their patronage will justify their expectations.

New York Theatrical Letter

BROADWAY FAVORITES.

1. Mary Garden, who it is said has demanded $90,000 a year to sing in this country again.

2. Jane Marburg, who will appear in the leading female role in "Bobby Burnitt," which opens in August.

3. Margaret Anglin, who will appear in a comedy during the coming season.

By EMORY B. CALVERT.

NEW YORK, July 16.—The period of summer inactivity has finally settled down on Broadway, and new plays are as scarce as rubies in an almshouse. For the past two weeks not a single production has graced the boards, and, with the exception of Eddie Foy's new play, "Up and Down Broadway," which is scheduled to open at the Casino theater on Monday night, there is nothing on the horizon for the next two weeks.

This condition of affairs will undergo a change about August 1, however, when several of last season's successes will re-open. New plays will follow in quick succession and by the end of August the 1910-11 theatrical season will be well under way.

This is in striking contrast to the conditions that existed several years ago. Then it was the custom of the leading theaters to close their doors in June and remain shut until the middle or latter part of September. But the beginning of the war that is being waged by the theatrical syndicates changed everything. The "summer shows" sprang into being and have now become a permanent institution. Then in order to outdo one another, the syndicates began opening their theaters for the regular winter season in August. This action was not taken in response to any demand by an eager theater-going public, but simply an effort to gain an advantage over a rival.

The excellent summer shows now running on Broadway are well able to take care of all patrons of the theater until the middle of September and the new productions that begin their careers in August will be handicapped until cooler weather sets in.

But this fact does not deter the managers of the rival syndicates. They are going ahead with their plans, and from present indications the contest will be warmer than ever before. Since the close of last season each side has lost theaters, previously under its control, to the other, and has taken immediate steps to replace their losses with new properties.

As a result, when the season formally opens, there will be more theaters to be supplied with productions than ever before and musical comedies and dramas will be ground out to order. This will undoubtedly result in the quantity of next season's productions being far greater than the quality.

This battle for the managerial supremacy is of importance only to the theatrical promoters and speculators directly concerned in the fight. The theater-going public does not care as a rule who produces a play. The names of Klaw Erlanger Frohman or the Shuberts mean little to it. The play's the thing after all, and the whole solid business of monopolizing booking privileges is a matter of secondary importance. If the energies of the managers were concentrated upon improving the quality of plays rather than quarreling with each other the drama in America would receive a much-needed stimulus.

The Aborn Opera company has opened a season of light opera at the Plaza Music hall, the finest production of their repertoire being Gilbert and Sullivan's tuneful opera, 'The Mikado.'

Corse Payton's Stock company, which is giving some very creditable revivals at the Academy of Music, is at present playing Belasco's "Girl of the Golden West," in which Blanche Bates had such a long and successful run.

For the first time since she has become a star, Margaret Anglin will be seen during the coming season in a comedy, under the direction of Liebler & Co. For a number of years Miss Anglin stood in the front rank of America's emotional actresses, and her advent into comedy is looked forward to with considerable interest.

I almost forgot to mention the fact that Jack Johnson, the world's champion heavyweight, made his first New York appearance this week on the stage of Hammerstein's Victoria theater, but is not proving so great a drawing card as was anticipated. Of course the seats are never vacant, as aside from the established popularity of the house, 'gentlemen of color' are always on hand clamoring for admission in order to get a glimpse of their idol. Hammerstein was greatly relieved when the news was flashed over the wire that Johnson had defeated Jeffries, as he had taken a chance and signed the black fellow for one week's engagement at $2,500 whether he won or lost the fight.

Mary Garden, the opera singer, is becoming almost as exorbitant in her salary demands as heavyweight prizefighters. It is said she is insisting on 50 performances at $1,800 apiece to appear at the Metropolitan Opera house next season. If this is an indication of the demands of other singers it does not appear that Hammerstein's withdrawal from the operatic field will materially affect the salaries of European song birds.

Maude Adams will be supported by the following players in Charles Frohman's production of "Chanticler" this season: Edwin Arden, Arthur Byron and Dorothy Dorr, as well as other prominent players to be announced later.

The past Paris theatrical season is reported to be the most successful in history, excepting only that of the exhibition year. Theaters and music halls, excluding the subsidized houses, have taken in the sum of $10,000,000 at the doors.

George M Cohan will open his new New York theater with a comedy from his own pen. In the cast will be the entire Cohan family, Tom Lewis and Emma Janvier. The opening will take place some time in October.

Al Field will present a burlesque of Rostand's "Chanticler" and Locke's 'The Climax' in his minstrel production this season.

GERMANY'S INDIGNATION OVER PAPAL ENCYCLICAL IS RAPIDLY DYING OUT

Outcome of Affair Defeat for Merry Del Val Austria Takes New Tack in Fighting Standard Oil Socialists Still Gaining.

By FREDERICK WERNER.

BERLIN, July 16.—Though a good deal of grumbling is still to be heard among the public, the storm of indignation raised by the pope's recent encyclical reflecting on the "privileges and peoples" of Luther's time can be regarded as having nearly died out.

Prussian diplomacy has come out of the affair with flying colors for it has extracted an expression of papal regret for the terms used in the encyclical in German dioceses.

Nothing more could reasonably be demanded or expected, and Cardinal Merry del Val has suffered a defeat that threatens to destroy his prestige forever.

For some little time after the appearance of the encyclical apprehension was widespread that a new "Kulturkampf," this time of a purely sectarian and not merely educational character, was about to develop, but times have changed in Germany since the days of Luther and with the change the ancient fanaticism has almost died out. There is still plenty of the old antagonism between Protestants and Catholics in Germany, but it has shifted from the domain of religion to that of politics.

Fight on Standard.

The government of Austria has finally decided to help the national oil industry by administrative measures in their battle against the Standard Oil subsidiaries, especially the Austrian Vacuum Oil company, and so the battle will from now on, be conducted by the two princes, Emperor Francis Joseph as the head of the government of Austria and John D. Rockefeller, ruler of untold millions of the Standard Oil dollars.

It was originally intended to strike against the American octopus by legislation, but the Austrian government has seen that this method would be too slow, and now quicker means to drive John D.'s representatives out of Austria will be adopted.

The Austrian Vacumn Oil company hurts the independent Austrian refineries in two ways first by raising the price of crude oil, second by lowering the price of the refined product, and as the government has seen that this would inevitably mean a crushing defeat for the Austrian industry which would leave John D. Rockefeller in absolute control of the battlefield, the methods of the Americans are to be met by increased freight rates on all railroads. As the cowed and bought railroad companies of America have helped to build up the immense fortunes of the Standard Oil millionaires so the Austrian state railroads, which cannot be bought or corrupted, are to crush John D. Rockefeller's ambitious hopes in the dual monarchy.

For the first time in his life, probably "Oily John" will meet his master, and Francis Joseph's government will be victor unless the government at Washington interferes and objects to the restriction of the output of the American company in Austria to its original concession of 30,000 tons a year, but this the Austrian government, reckoning with the strong anti-Standard Oil feeling in Washington, considers a most unlikely thing to happen.

Socialists Win.

Another Socialist election victory at Friedberg some three weeks ago has aroused the greatest political excitement Germany has seen for years, because it was here made plainly evident that many National Liberals voted for the Socialist candidate That the radicals join hands with the Socialists is now taken as a matter of course, but that also the voters of the National Liberals have gone over to the enemy shows how bitter is the feeling among the people against the present government.

The public is so embittered over the "Blue-Black Bloc," which is now the ruling factor in Germany and Prussia over its financial legislation and its general reactionary policy that support is being given and will continue to be given, on all hands to Socialist candidates as the only means of definitely scattering it.

How many more defeats will be required before the National Zeitung, before the conviction is arrived at that a change of system is an absolute necessity? Whether the policy of the liberal parties of helping the Socialists with the object of undermining the power of reactionaries will benefit themselves is another matter. The ground they now relinquish in favor of the Socialists will be recovered with great difficulty, and there is a possibility that after the general election next year there will be the extreme conservative and Agrarian parties on the one side of the reichstag and extreme radicals or Socialists on the other, with the centre again predominant through being in a position to form a majority with either the right or the left as the occasion may demand.

KING DOESN'T DRINK, PUBLICLY ANNOUNCED

Widely Circulated Yarns Concerning English Monarch Caused Him Intense Pain.

LONDON, July 16.—It will probably take years for the slanders which have been circulated about King George's addiction to strong drink to die down. These stories have been repeated from one to the other for several years past, and only the members of his household, who in duty bound repeated the stories to their master, know what intense pain they have caused the new king.

So serious a view has now been taken of these stories that the dean of Norwich, who has been intimate with the king for years, felt himself compelled the other day to deny them with great force from the pulpit, and Lord Rosebery has, as delicately as possible done the same thing both in public and in private.

In the past six or seven years King George has suffered acutely from indigestion His nose becomes intensely red immediately after eating and his eyes water, which gives him just the appearance of a man who has been drinking This is considered by his intimate friends to be the only possible explanation of the stories which have been circulated with so many circumstantial details.

Scene of the wrecked Zeppelin III near Hamburg The Deutschland, which was modelled after the Zeppelin III, was carrying 22 people on a journey from Dusseldorf to Dortmund, Germany. After an hour's sail, the Deutschland encountered a high wind and ascended 4,000 feet only to encounter a whirlwind. A heavy rain followed and the Deutschland was lowered to make observations. Suddenly one of the motors stopped and the craft slowly settled on the tree tops of the Teutoborgian forest. All of the passengers and crew escaped without injury, but the airship is a total wreck. The ship cost $137,500.

COMPULSORY MARRIAGE BILL CREATES CONSTERNATION IN OFFICIAL CIRCLES

By GEORGE DUFRESNE.

PARIS, July 16 In official circles the prospect of instant compulsory marriage, if Professor Lannelongue's drastic bill to increase the birth-rate becomes law, has caused some excitement and alarm. Benedicts naturally chortle, for in the future every fresh arrival in the family may mean promotion to papa

But all "functionaries" are by no means married men. In fact the bachelors are probably in the majority, while spinsters certainly are in the posts, telegraphs and telephones. Hitherto, chiefs of all government offices have, as a rule, shown an unmistakable bias in favor of bachelors among the male clerks. The idea generally was that a functionary without home encumbrances was more zealous in the discharge of his public duties He would not mind working overtime, having only to run out and dine at a restaurant, whereas his married colleague was afraid of keeping madame waiting and spoiling the dinner.

Now all this is to be changed. It will be rather hard on some. A bachelor, having severely starved his natural human ambition to be the father of a family in order to get on in the "administration," will have some cause for complaint if the tables are turned and married men pass over his head, now that, perhaps, he has reached an age at which it is no longer so easy to find a mate as it might have been What might-have-beens, indeed, will not the unfortunate bachelor functionary sigh over! One can imagine him losing his temper even in the presence of his chief

'I was in love in April 1889. I loved again yet more deeply, in June 1897 I was madly in love in September, 1902 Each time I crushed my heart, I stifled my passion, nay, petitbance I broke other hearts, all to get on in this office, and, now Durand, who married when he was sixth assistant-deputy-under-clerk of the third class in your circumlocution department; Dupni, who actually married the girl I was in love with in June, 1897, or April, 1898—I forget which at the present moment—are to be promoted over me because they forsook their public duties and became fathers Justice, where art thou?"

What could the chief's answer be?

As for the ladies of the posts, telegraphs and telephones a few years ago there was actually a question whether marriage would not be forbidden them by regulation. Luckily, so inhuman a veto never was applied, or the postmaster who applied it would hear something from Professor Lannelongue But in practice the marriage of telephone girls is most certainly not encouraged, and it is difficult to imagine that it could be. The most efficient telephonist is not likely to be the lady who has most babies at home whom she would prefer to mind, and, as a matter of fact, ought to be minding, instead of connecting wires for impatient people to exchange usually idle talk over them. A regulation, at all events, exists and is rigorously enforced, forbidding any female government permission Men clerks can marry without leave of the authorities at present Soon they may have to marry to comply with the regulations.

FRANCE ALARMED BY GERMAN AERONAUTICS

French Lead However, in Developing of the Heavier-Than-Air Machine.

By GEORGE DUFRESNE.

PARIS, July 16.—The remarkable development of German military aeronautics has for some months past created a feeling of alarm in France The dirigible, said a French senator a short time ago, is the eye of the army. In that case the French army would be blind if war broke out suddenly, also as Germany have at least 25 dirigibles with which to pilot them and proper sheds to house them. The service, the organization and the equipment are all that could be desired. France had only three dirigibles at the end of last March, and not one of them was fit for use.

The Temps since then has offered the state a dirigible of 7,000 cubic metres, but it will not be ready for another couple of months. M. Millerand followed the good example, but his gift, the Capitaine-Tarrible cannot be completed until October 1.

In France the skies are bad; there are no lighthouses for night operations and no projectiles to destroy effectively hostile balloons. General Brun, minister of war, is not an advocate of the dirigible; he thinks it is destined to disappear. The aeroplane inspires all his confidence, and he has some reason for it.

During the last nine months military aviation (heavier-than-the air) has made great strides in France, thanks to the happy idea of transferring the service from the engineers to the artillery. The military reconnaissance effected by an aeroplane on the 9th of last month was unique of its kind Two infantry officers did the trip from Chalons to Vincennes in two hours and a half, the distance being 100 miles, and now, for some reason not easily understood, General Brun is giving the aviation service back to the engineers.

ENGLISH SUFFRAGETTES STUDY JIUJITSU AND PLAN TO HANDLE OPPONENTS ROUGHLY

By PHILLIP EVERETT.

LONDON, July 16.—The members of the Women's Freedom league have begun to show what they meant when they told Prime Minister Asquith he would be sorry is he did not give the women's charter the full support of the government.

In the first place, the league has engaged a female athlete and jiujitsu expert to show militant suffragettes how to handle unfriendly police, and, judging from what I saw yesterday, when a little woman of apparently no strength whatever six times threw a burly 200-pound policeman over her head in a friendly contest, I should hate to be a London policeman in a suffrage row, and I shudder to think of what may happen to cabinet ministers like Mr Asquith or Mr. Churchill They will either have to become jiujitsu experts or get out. Any other course will mean broken bones

Another means of getting even with an opponent adopted by the Freedom league is less violent, but perhaps more effective Large numbers of tax-paying women are now prepared to defy the tax collector until the carrying of some measure of women's suffrage.

Mrs Despard president of the Women's Freedom league who has persistently refused to pay her taxes for 18 months has now been threatened by the internal revenue department with arrest and imprisonment

Correspondence has taken place between Mrs Despard and Somerset House and the lady in reply to a demand from the internal revenue department states that her determination is not shaken She absolutely refuses to pay her share of the imperial taxes until the right to citizenship, which she claims is recognized by those who impose the taxes

Still further threats of a new militant move, in view of the government's refusal to offer facilities for the passing of the bill, have been uttered by Mrs and Miss Pankhurst

Mrs. Pankhurst contends that if Mr. Asquith had been democratic, wise and polite he would have promised the women's deputation facilities for this bill, which was the smallest instalment of justice that women would accept. If he did not reconsider his decision, they would put into effect a new plan of campaign

Mr Keir Hardie says he had been attacked by his own party for supporting this bill on the ground that it was a movement for the enfranchisement of ladies, as if a working woman couldn't be a lady He had never considered whom the bill would benefit he was only concerned for the removal of the sex disqualification The same forces were at work to keep women from being enfranchised as were working to keep India and Egypt from being enfranchised and he would say to those who disagreed with his views that they had no right to claim freedom for themselves unless they were prepared to grant it to others

INNOVATION IN ENGLISH SAVINGS BANK SYSTEM

LONDON July 16—As an encouragement of thrift the British postoffice is adopting a new idea in connection with its savings bank department At the same time the new idea will mean a saving of expense in the department where each transaction with depositors costs an average sum of 10 cents The postoffice will lend to those who wish to save small sums a metal box which will be unbreakable and invisible that is the money can not be abstracted except by the proper channel, of which the postoffice authorities will keep the key As well as the box is filled it may be taken to the nearest postoffice, where the official will open it, take out the money and credit the depositor with the amount of its contents.

ARREST OF RUSSIAN BARON FOR SELLING MILITARY SECRETS MORE THAN SENSATION

ST. PETERSBURG, July 16.—The arrest of Baron von Ungern-Sternburg on a charge of betraying Russian military secrets to a foreign power is not an incident of more sensational interest but an event affecting the general situation of Europe and bound to embitter the relations of Russia and Austria. Only a few months ago the two governments announced that their ordinary diplomatic relations had been renewed after the period of friction produced by the Austrian annexation of Bosnia, which was a diplomatic defeat of M. Izvolsky when public opinion in Russia assumed a dangerously bellicose attitude towards Austria. The baron's arrest opens up the old wound, and goes far to undo the work of diplomats to ameliorate the situation.

The knowledge of this fact forces the authorities to wrap the affair in mystery It is now unquestionable that the power involved in Austria and the examining magistrate today limited his questions to Madame Sternburg to the relations betwen the baron and Major Count Lelio-Spannocchi, military attache to the Austrian embassy, and aide-de-camp to the emperor. According to accounts printed in the St. Peterbusg press, documents of a highly incriminating character have been found by the police at the baron's house, including a list of ten persons having supplied him with military secrets together with the amounts paid Even if the baron is able to refute this charge such statements together with the appended paragraph of the Novoe Vremya that Herr Spannocchi will be obliged to leave St Petersburg forever, are sufficient to renew the bad blood between the two countries.

The central figure of the new international drama is a man in the prime of life. He has already had an extraordinary career After resigning his commission in a Russian dragon regiment when about 22, he enlisted in the French foreign legion, and served in Algiers. He afterwards deserted and settled in Spain. After some years' residence there he went to Vienna, thence he returned to Russia as correspondent of the bureau of the semi-official Vienna Telegraph agency. He was thus brought into constant touch with the Austrian embassy, where his usefulness secured him certain pecuniary remuneration. About two years ago he added to his work duties as Daily Mail correspondent. He also represented Le Journal and the Stockholm and Berlin papers—activities which increased his value to Austrian diplomats.

The secret police have sent a report of the case to M. Izvolsky, in view of its delicate nature. The general public is eagerly awaiting further developments.

KING GEORGE WANTS MODERN RESIDENCE

BUCKINGHAM PALACE UGLY AND UNSANITARY.

Is Laughing Stock of All Foreign Visitors and Eyesore to Londoners.

By PHILLIP EVERETT.

LONDON, July 16.—King George has, since he became king of England, only expressed one wish that he may be given a decent London residence in which to receive royal guests from other countries, many of whom, and especially the kaiser, were always teasing King Edward about the ugliness of Buckingham palace. Royal complaints of the unfitness of the dirty old palace as a residence for the representative of the English nation are of very old date.

"I have come," said the late Queen Victoria once to a certain duchess, "from my house to your palace," and she was not exaggerating at all, for the sovereign of the world's greatest empire is indeed lodged worse than quite a few of his subjects.

Buckingham palace, in its squat and gloomy ugliness, is an eyesore to all Londoners and the laughing stock of all foreign visitors. It looks a great deal more like a barn than like a palace and its interior arrangements are about on the level of the average New York tenement. Certainly no well to do American would consider it a fit place to live in

Sir Aston Webb and others have from time to time made various suggestions for the improvement of the palace, but with its hideous allegorical figures, more suitable for a circus than for a royal residence, one fails to imagine how it could possibly be improved except by a fire, which it would be impossible to check if it ever started, for the old palace is one of the most dangerous firetraps in Europe.

Doubly secure is claimed to be a new safety pin patented by an Illinois man, which has two points, one each side of a central bar.

FUNERAL ATTENDANTS CREMATE OWN EFFIGY

PARIS, July 16.—The "croque-morts" (funeral attendants), who have for some time [illegible] against the hideous uniforms they are forced to wear, [illegible] out the monotony in a serio-comic [illegible]

Being municipal employes, they chose the square fronting the Hotel de Ville as the scene of their demonstration They brought with them three coffins filled with old wood, and an effigy dressed in the obnoxious swallow-tail coat and glazed tall hat. They placed the dummy atop of the coffins, drenched with oil, and set the whole afire

A few of the croque-morts were placed under arrest, but no other consequences followed the grim demonstration.

MUST WEAR MUSTACHES

LONDON, July 16—Mustaches are considered so important in the British army, that a special order has been issued at Aldershot drawing attention to the regulations on hirsute adornment. It seems that [illegible] young officers, especially in the cavalry, have been using the razor on the upper lip, following the prevailing fashion of clean-shaven faces Now the "King's Regulations" [illegible] define the style in which the soldier's face may or may not be clean shaved facially. "The upper lip is not to be shaved, and the chin and under lip are to be shaved Whiskers, if worn, are to be of moderate length." This order dates back 50 years when an officer but a few retired still [illegible] now wear whiskers The majority of officers conform to the regulations as to mustaches, but it has become the fashion in the cavalry (in direct opposition to tradition and Ovide's precepts) to go barefaced. Hence the order.

TELEPHONING HALF A MILE THROUGH EARTH

New English Wireless Telephone Invention Important in Mining Industry.

By PHILLIP EVERETT.

LONDON, July 16—How conversation can be carried on half a mile or more beneath the earth with those on the surface was demonstrated with perfect success yesterday by means of the Heisby wireless telephone in the subterranean caves of Chislehurst which extend altogether for some 30 miles underground

Mr Sharman, the inventor remained on the hill above the entrance to the caves while a small party went nearly three-quarters of a mile under the earth along the tortuous underground passages carved out many hundreds of years ago by the ancient Druids

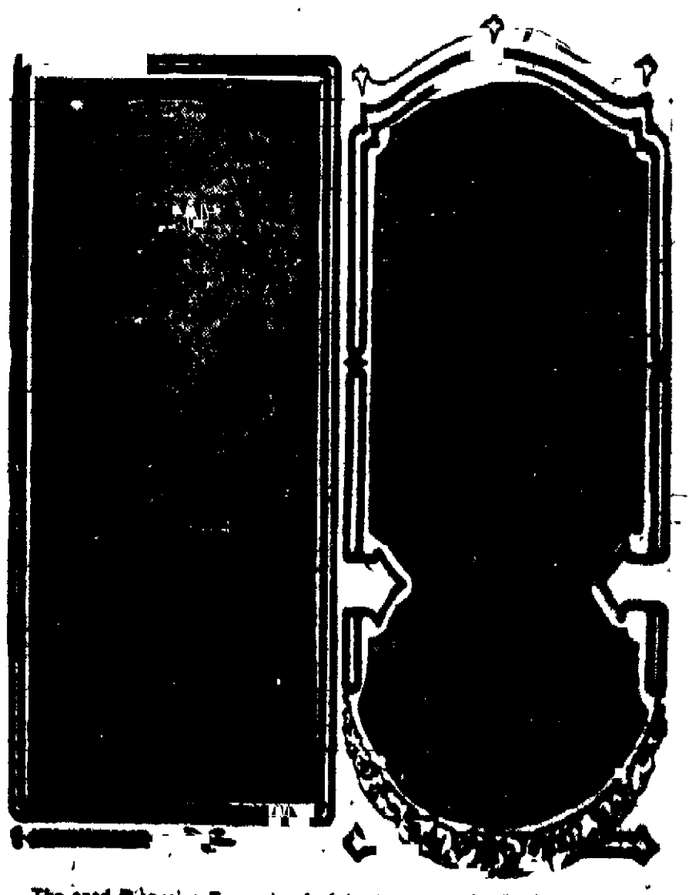

There an operator set up a similar portable instrument, attached merely by two wires to small forks stuck into the earth

Conversation was established within a minute or two between those in the cave and Mr Sharman above the earth, and maintained until every one of the spectators had experienced the novel sensation of talking through the earth.

Special instruments are at present being made for communicating with [illegible]

Anybody Want the "Cowboy Baronet?"

SIR GENILLE DOING ROPING STUNT.

By CHARLES N. LURIE.

THE folks back in England have been after me for months and months, hammering, hammering away at me to get married, get married, GET MARRIED, and I'm tired of it. A man in my position simply must pay attention to what his family says, and so I've decided to marry and settle down if I can, provided there is a nice girl who will have me. But she must have money, if we are to keep Stretton Hall in the family. If you know of any nice girl with money who is willing to marry for a title and take with it a man who hasn't a sou in the world, why, send her along, won't you?"

He says it with a smile, does Sir Arthur Cave-Browne-Cave, the "cowboy baronet" now in the United States again, but underneath the smile there is the earnestness of a purpose deliberately matured. Just listen to him:

"You see, there are the estates and the family name to be kept up. Unless I get married and a large sum of money, in some way there is danger that Stretton Hall, which has been in the family for many centuries, will be lost to us. My father piled mortgage after mortgage on it and on the collieries that form the main part of the family property. The income now is just about enough to pay the jointure of Lady Cave, my mother, and the vicar, who gets a good share of the revenue. There is a little left for me, but not enough to talk about. To maintain my position and to give my wife the station to which my family's position will entitle her I simply will have to have money and lots of it. You really can't blame me for taking this view of things, can you? Lots of Englishmen of title have done exactly the same thing, haven't they?"

Besides his title, which is genuine and very, very ancient, Sir Genille offers to the lady who will exchange her money for his inducement five foot eight and 200 pounds of sturdy manhood, damaged a bit by several bullet and knife and spear wounds, but in splendid repair and not unattractive in appearance, save possibly for a head rather deficient in covering on top.

The woman who gets Sir Genille may marry him for his title, and he is perfectly frank in saying no poor girl need apply, but there is a strong possibility that in the end she will follow the example of Desdemona and love him for the dangers he has passed. Provided he overcomes his somewhat halting style of speech—like most brave men he does not tell fluidly of his adventures—she could have no finer true stories of adventures encountered in many parts of the earth. Sir Genille has been soldier, scout, ranchman, sheriff and cowboy. He has followed the trail of cattle and horse thieves in more than one western state and has faced dangers in several places "somewhere east of Suez." All in all, looking at him with the eyes of the romantic maiden who admires the man who does things, there is much to be said in favor of Sir Genille Cave-Browne-Cave.

Asked whether he desired any qualifications in particular in the future Lady Cave, Sir Genille said that, barring the inevitable qualification of money, more money and lots of money, he wanted a "nice girl." There are nice girls in this country, many of them, as witness the thriving export trade in them which we have carried on for many years. And some of them have loads of money. And one of them may want to marry Sir Genille Cave-Browne-Cave and become Lady Cave. If this meets the eye of any of the or of that of the mamma of any of them here is her chance. Don't crowd, ladies. The baronet's address is Richmond Hill, Long Island, N. Y.

It is a genuine and a perfectly good title that is offered by Sir Genille in exchange for cash. About his title there is no doubt such as has been cast on those of some of the foreigners who have carried our heiresses to their fake and stuffed lords in Europe. The record of the Cave-Browne-Cave family, of which Sir Genille is the undoubted head, being the only surviving son of the late Sir Mylles Cave-Browne-Cave, fills three pages of Burke's peerage. The family is of Norman origin, one of the very oldest in Great Britain. Some authorities place it fifth on the list of the English nobility.

Failing an heir to Sir Genille, the family honors and what remains of the estates will go to a first cousin, Captain Reginald Cave, who was formerly a captain in the royal navy and who is an aviation enthusiast. There is no love lost between Sir Genille and his cousin.

"I would like nothing better," says the former, "than to bring a rich wife home to Stretton Hall and fool him out of his chances of becoming the thirteenth baronet."

On the other hand, there is little doubt that Captain Reginald would fail to mourn deeply were Sir Genille to follow the example of his elder brother, Geoffrey Thiele, and permit himself to be killed by a fall from a horse. Geoffrey Thiele met his death in Ceylon in a polo game thirty years ago.

Sir Genille is a good specimen of the type of Englishman that has carried the cross of St. George into the wild and dim places of the earth. Plenty of his forty years have been spent in adventurous pursuits that have left their marks on his scarred body and ruddy, broad, good natured face. The "call of the wild" has led him from Burma to Tientsin, from Afghanistan to Wyoming. He was with Miles in Porto Rico in 1898 and served under Seymour in the naval brigade that helped to rescue the legations during the Boxer uprising. He has fought against the devils of the Afghan frontier, who nightly upset Great Britain's plans, and he has led posses against cattle rustlers in Oklahoma. He is a first class man with weapons of all sorts and can handle a lariat with the best of our western frontiersmen. He tells with pride of winning a medal for breaking the world's record in a steer roping and tying contest in Oklahoma six years ago, when he roped and tied a steer in the marvelously fast time of 19½ seconds. He was pitted then against some of the most expert cowpunchers of the west.

So much for Sir Genille's family history and description and the inducements he holds out to fortune. As for his looks, the accompanying pictures will convey some idea of them. They show the ex-soldier, scout, frontiersman, sheriff and cowboy in the act of performing difficult feats with a 50 fathom inch plaited "rope" such as no cowpuncher uses.

Asked to tell of his narrowest escape from death, Sir Genille says it is a question whether it came when he was blown up in a magazine explosion at Tientsin, remaining unconscious three days, or whether it was when a cattle thief whom he was chasing at the head of a posse sent a 45 bullet across the top of his head, grazing it and knocking him out for the time. "But we got that bunch of cattle-rustlers," says Sir Genille. "Four of them we shot, and three were hanged. A funny thing about it came later when for sport I asked a phrenologist in Kansas City to feel my bumps. He said, I have forgotten what that bump means. He was feeling the lump raised by the bullet."

"Come Right In," Says Uncle Sam

"WHY, howdy do?" said Uncle Sam. "Come right in and make yourselves at home!"

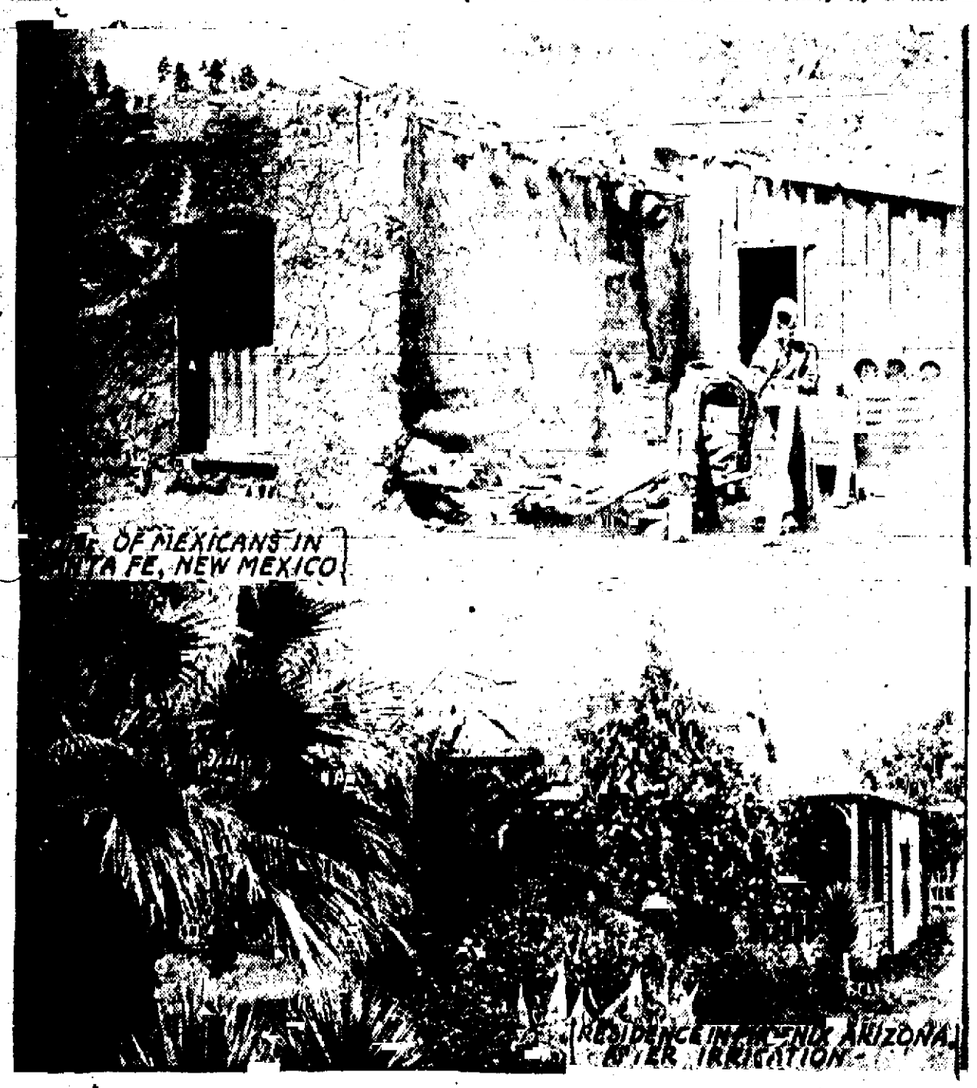

And the old gentleman stretches out his right hand to Arizona and his left to New Mexico and gives the two comers the seats of the avuncular right and left knee. "You're the fourth biggest of my nephews in point of size, he says to New Mexico. "So you sit right with all the "modern improvements." have sprung up. Farming is still in its infancy in Arizona, however. As one writer put it not long ago, "you could bunch all the farms of Arizona into one corner of one county and forget where you left them." But in specialized products Arizona is doing exceedingly well. The writer well remembers the delight with which a few years ago he [illegible] the appearance of the first [illegible] Wade said that, according to what he had heard, Arizona was like the nether regions all it lacked was water and good society—it is not true today. By means of gigantic irrigation projects the water has been coaxed into doing its work of making the desert bloom like the garden, and the good society has been supplied by immigration from other states. Where once the terrible Apache roamed thriving little cities, capable of being evolved into good American citizens. The Indians form a negligible fraction of the whole.

Conditions in New Mexico as regards population are very different from those in Arizona. There the Spanish American element predominates, about 60 per cent of the people tracing their ancestry back to Spain, in many cases through lines of Mexican Indian descent. [illegible] is more used than English in many communities, and in places the court and other official proceedings are carried on in the foreign tongue. The predominance of Spanish American citizens in New Mexico formed the basis of much of the fierce opposition manifested in Arizona against joint admission with New Mexico as one state. The Arizonians, who prided themselves on their Anglo Saxon blood, protested so strongly against being tied up with the people of their neighboring sister territory that the project fell through and separate statehood was delayed until now.

The passage of the act admitting Arizona and New Mexico and its approval by the executive did not automatically admit them into the Union. They will not be full fledged states, adding two stars to the flag, until several months have passed. In the meantime, however, the two commonwealths may go ahead with their plans for full statehood, electing delegates to consult in conventions. The constitutions will be sent to the people of the territories on return home and then will go to congress and the president for approval. Even if congress fails to act on the constitutions the states will be admitted sixty days after March 4 next, and the two new stars, making forty-eight in all, will be added to the flag on the following Fourth of July independence day, according to law and custom. There will be great festivities in Phoenix, the capital of Arizona, and Santa Fe, the chief city of New Mexico, when the two states are finally admitted into the Union.

In mineral resources and in agricultural possibilities Arizona and New Mexico rank among the greatest of American commonwealths. In scenic grandeur they surpass most of the other states, according to the highest authorities in such matters. The Grand Canyon of the Colorado, in Arizona, is generally considered the most wonderful region in America, if not in the world. For 200 miles the river flows through scenery of indescribable grandeur and beauty. As in the case of Niagara, neither pen nor painter has ever been able to depict the glories of the Grand Canyon. It eludes description. Possibly the advent of Arizona into the Union will help to turn the attention of Americans toward the wonderful treasures they possess in the canyon. New Mexico, with its high mountains, its wide stretches of grazing country, its lava beds, etc., also possesses scenic beauties of a very high order.

Blind Senator Sees Indian Wrongs

AS A result of Senator Gore's recent charges of attempted bribery, made on the floor of the United States senate, a clear revelation of the relations of the Indians of Oklahoma with the government at Washington is expected. Whether or not it is shown that there exists "an orgy of graft," as alleged by Gore, [illegible] Goodwin, who was assistant attorney general for the interior department under Secretary Garfield, it seems certain that the action of the Oklahoma senator will result in the laying bare of some interesting facts.

In brief, Senator Gore charged that $1,000,000, with a possible increase to $50,000,000, had been offered to him for his good offices in connection with legislation affecting the sale of coal and oil lands by the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians of Oklahoma. He asserted that in the event of favorable legislation by congress fees aggregating $2,000,000 were to be paid to J. Frank McMurray and other lawyers for effecting the sale of the lands. Other legislators were said to have been implicated in the deal. It is Senator Gore's avowed purpose to save the $2,000,000 to the Indians. Laws passed at the closing hours of the recent session of congress held up the payment of the fees, largely through the publicity given to them by the senator's charges. An investigation of the whole matter is to be begun by committees of the senate and house in Oklahoma City about Aug. 1.

The story of the Five Civilized Tribes of what used to be Indian territory—the Cherokees, Chickasaws, Choctaws, Creeks and Seminoles—is very complicated. For many decades after their removal from the southern states these Indians lived in the territory on lands allotted to them by the government. They dwelt in peace, in semicivilized fashion, maintaining themselves partially by government bounty and partially by agriculture, until white men began to drift into their country. These latter saw that the land was good and determined to win it from the Indians. With that end in view every device of fraud, chicanery and deceit has been employed against the Indians, as well as the arts of wily persuasion. Not all of it has been criminal by any means. In many cases it has not been difficult to remain within the letter of the law while inducing the Indians to part with their valuable lands for inadequate considerations.

Owing to ignorance of white men's ways, the full blooded Indians have been the easiest victims of the men who sought them out for the purpose of acquiring their lands. When other methods of persuasion failed the whites did not hesitate at intermarriage. By the provisions of the tribal laws which formerly governed the Indians, a white man or woman married to an Indian became to all intents and purposes an Indian and as such entitled to share in the Indian lands. The proportion of white blood has increased steadily.

According to the latest available statistics, the numbers in the Five Civilized Tribes are as follows: Cherokees, 41,805; Chickasaws, 11,758; Choctaws, 26,771; Creeks, 18,714; Seminoles, 3,124; total, 101,469. In this total are included 23,882 enrolled freedmen (former slaves and descendants of former slaves of the Indians) and 2,184 intermarried whites. All of them, men, women and children, are equal in respect to the allotment of lands by the government.

The coal lands and oil lands of the Choctaws and Chickasaws, the disposition of which has been called into question by Senator Gore's action, are immensely valuable. Some authorities place their value as high as $150,000,000, and few estimate them as low as $[illegible],000,000, the [illegible] which a syndicate of white men is said to have offered.

J. Frank McMurray obtained a contract with the Choctaw and the Chickasaw Nations to sell their coal and oil lands and was to receive 10 per cent of the proceeds. President Roosevelt and Secretary Garfield refused to approve this contract on the ground that the fee was exorbitant. Mr. McMurray then sent out hundreds of agents, and they presently obtained individual contracts from more than 10,000 Indians.

Senator Gore introduced a resolution to investigate the matter. It was favorably reported and referred to the committee on contingent expenses.

The senate, aroused by the startling charges, lost no time in allowing the blind senator to [illegible] an amendment covering these contracts in practically his own language. This amendment was promptly adopted by the senate and [illegible] house, and now it will be impossible for the law firm to obtain its enormous fee in the event of the sale of the Indian coal lands without the commissions being approved by congress.

The man who has caused all the stir about the Indian lands is the fearless blind senator from Oklahoma, the youngest member of the senate and the only sightless man who ever sat in that body. He has won a reputation in the senate as he did in his territory and state before his election, as a fighter of big caliber. The sightless man who has fought his way by sheer will power into the world's highest legislative body will never let go of this subject, those who know him say, until he wins what he considers justice for the Indian children of his state.

LUCY KNOX, FIRST SOCIAL ARBITER OF THE REPUBLIC

ONE of the Most Brilliant Women of Revolutionary Days Who Was at Home Equally in the Ball Room or the Camp and Who Shared the Horrors of Valley Forge in Order to Make Clothes for the Half Clad Soldiers.

LUCY KNOX

IT was not all sorrow privation and struggle in the Revolution. Occasionally, as at Pluckemin, in Somerset county New Jersey, in February, 1779 there was a celebration that would be creditable even in these days It marked the first anniversary of the French alliance and most of the troops that Washington had under his immediate command took part in the festivities Pluckemin is at the base of a mountain, about six miles northwest of Somerville At the summit is a rock from which a magnificent view of the country for many miles around may be had From this rock many times in the campaigns in Jersey Washington watched the movements of the enemy and of his own troops.

It was to the Pluckemin country that Washington led his little army after the battle of Princeton, and it was there he decided to have the celebration over the French alliance. No more beautiful spot could have been selected With the hills for a background and the plain as a stage nature furnished ample setting. Early in the day there was a parade of the army, which was reviewed by Washington, Greene, Knox Steuben and all the principal officers of the Continental force. Then in the afternoon there was a great banquet Thirteen guns were fired as the signal for the opening of the feast Scores of beeves had been slaughtered to provide abundantly for the feast the neighborhood as far to the west as Easton, Pa, and to the north as far as Morristown being drawn upon for supplies

Then, soon after dusk, there was a display of fireworks. Maybe Pain can do better today, but never were such fireworks seen before as were displayed at Pluckemin that February night 131 years ago. They were prepared by Colonel Stevens, the engineering genius of the time and founder of the famous Stevens family of New Jersey To show them properly he had built a temple 100 feet long and proportionately high. In the temple were thirteen arches and within each arch was an illuminated painting. The first represented the battle of Lexington. The second British clemency, as displayed by the burning of Charlestown, Norfolk and other places. The third a broken arch, symbolizing the rupture of England and America. The fourth the decay of the British Empire. Fifth, the rise of the New Empire, with harbors teeming with commerce, cities rising amid woods and the sun in its splendor shining on the scene. Sixth, Louis XVI., encourager of justice friend of America. Seventh, the fathers in Congress Eighth, Benjamin Franklin, philosopher and diplomat, drawing lightning from the clouds. Ninth, the battle of Saratoga. Tenth, the convocation at Saratoga Eleventh, the sea fight off Ushant Twelfth, Montgomery, Mercer and other fallen heroes entering Elysium and being greeted by Brutus, Cato and others, who had fought tyrants Thirteenth, Peace and her train of blessings.

The banquet was great and the fireworks were greater, and, to crown the day, there was a splendid ball, which was opened by General Washington and Lucy Knox.

To the women of America the review of the Army was nothing, the banquet was a mere incident, and the wonderful display of fireworks, while interesting, was only of passing interest. To them the most important feature of the whole great celebration was the selection by General Washington of his partner in the opening minuet, for the ball at Pluckemin practically was the first official social function of the republic, and the partner of the Commander-in-Chief would be looked upon as the first social arbiter of the republic.

There probably was a lot of heartburning over that minuet at Pluckemin that winter night, but Washington chose well. He had rare judgment in many things, and in none better than in this for the women who danced with him that night remained the social queens of America for many years thereafter.

A rare blending of the patrician and the democrat was Lucy Knox. Her father was a royalist, and as secretary of the colony of Massachusetts had been horrified when he found his daughter was in love with a common bookseller of Boston town. Bad as it was for her to love a lowly bookseller, it was worse when the bookseller was discovered to be an arrant rebel, a defiant blasphemer against the divine authority of the king and an advocate of force against royal order.

Fortune played strange antics with people in those days. The rich man who was secretary of the colony cast his daughter off when she married the poor bookseller, yet Thomas Flucker, secretary of Massachusetts, is known best today as the father of Lucy Knox, wife of Major General Henry Knox, chief of artillery of the Continental army and first war minister of the United States. The poor bookseller of Boston developed into one of the most influential men of the new nation.

There are few pictures to be had now of Lucy Knox. Stuart, who painted most of the celebrities of the revolutionary period, painted her portrait, and, dissatisfied with the picture, destroyed it. Only drawings remain to show her beauty. That she was one of the handsomest women of her time is undisputed. She had grace, dignity, and surpassing charm. There were few better educated women in America That she had a lot of courage her life shows.

Soon after her marriage to Knox the Battle of Lexington was fought. Boston practically was a prison, General Gage refusing to let the inhabitants out for fear they would join or lend aid to the patriot army. All the swords, guns and pistols possessed by private parties were ordered confiscated A few weeks before the battle Mrs. Knox quilted her husband's sword into her cloak and, making her way out of the city, joined him. From that time until the war was ended her life was a good deal in camp. From Bunker Hill to Yorktown she was with her husband in nearly every every campaign of the main army. Apparently she fitted as well in camp life as in the ballroom. Through the bleak winter at Valley Forge she sewed to make garments for the half-clad and half-frozen men of the army She was not the only one Many of the American officers had just as patriotic wives, and they worked with her. When the army was without shoes they wove rough foot coverings out of straw and reeds for the men to wear. There was no work, no hardship, no peril from which these women shrank They served as nurses to the wounded and the ill and they shared no better in the matter of food and little better in the matter of clothing than the soldiers that hardest winter in the struggle for liberty

But Valley Forge and Monmouth and all the stages of the contest up to Yorktown were no more trying to Lucy Knox than were the duties that developed upon her beginning with the surrender. During the siege of Yorktown she and Mrs Washington were together at Mount Vernon. Often in after years she used to describe the agitation they felt at this time, the alternate hope and fear which possessed them at the sight of a messenger from the front. They knew that upon Yorktown depended the fate of the nation. If relief came to Cornwallis the struggle might be prolonged until the colonists were exhausted. Already the country was almost prostrate.

At last came the word that the British had surrendered, and with it a summons to the two women to join their husbands and prepare for the festivities that the surrender ushered in.

This meant little to Martha Washington. She did not dance and she had no bent for matters social. To Lucy Knox it was different. She loved society. Bright, brilliant, witty, she never was more happy than when she had to provide for and entertain hundreds of persons. She had a marvelous skill in handling people. A social diplomat, speaking French and German as fluently as she could English, she directed nearly all the functions that marked the close of the war. There were many Germans in the British army and few of the French spoke English, so Mrs. Knox's knowledge of languages served her well at this time. Washington had great respect for her intellect and judgment and deferred to her in everything which was a question of etiquette, form or precedence was concerned. Society was in a queer jumble. There was far more distinction of rank then than now The old aristocracy was still strong, even if democracy was triumphant. The constitution might declare that all men were born free and equal, but it was difficult to bring them together on social equality.

It required infinite tact in the years 1781 and 1782 for Lucy Knox to marshal her forces so there would be no jarring. But she did it cleverly and well.

Following the formal declaration of peace and the evacuation of New York there was a multitude of state functions to celebrate these events, and then she and General Knox went to Boston to live. Mrs. Knox found Boston far different from the Boston of her youth. She had not been there since the days of Lexington. Her father and family were gone, and gone, too, were practically all the royalist families she had known in former days. The whole social aspect of the old town was changed, and hardly for the better.

But she did not remain in Boston long When Washington became president he made General Knox secretary of war, and in the capital, New York, Mrs. Knox was soon in her element again The Washingtons and Knoxes lived in adjoining houses in Broadway and the president's wife and the younger woman were like mother and daughter.

Mrs. Knox managed the "court," as some people called it, to perfection, and when the capital was moved to Philadelphia she continued her sway there. Soon after the move to Philadelphia there was a great accession of visitors of prominence to America. The French Revolution had started and thousands of nobles were hurled from affluence to poverty. To General and Mrs. Knox many of them brought letters of introduction from French officers who had served with him. There is a story of one of them, the Duc de Liancourt, who bewailed his fate to Mrs. Knox.

"Alas, Madam," he exclaimed, "what accomplishments have I that I may turn to a means of subsistence, I, who have three dukedoms on my head and not one coat on my back?"

She got a coat of the general's and gave it to the duke, for it was literally true that he did not have a coat. He was more fortunate than many of his companions, for a few years later his possessions were restored to him, and when he died he was one of the richest men of France. But for three years he lived on the bounty of General Knox.

Another visitor was Talleyrand Crafty man that he was, he sought to make it appear that he knew no English and pretended too great stupidity to acquire it. He really wanted to hear Americans converse without reserve and perhaps he wanted to catch people off guard. But Lucy Knox was too clever for him She laid a trap for the great minister and when he fell into it no one could be more gracious than he in acknowledging her skill.

For 11 years General Knox was at the head of the war office, and for those 11 years Lucy Knox held undisputed sway in social matters at the capital. Then the general retired. His private affairs demanded attention. He was not wealthy, but his wife was. The riches that had been her father's came to her. She had a vast estate in Maine. They went there and at Thomaston built a splendid mansion, a palace in its dimensions. This was furnished magnificently. They called the place Montpelier, and here they entertained even more lavishly than did the great landowners of Virginia

It was not unusual so great was the number of visitors, for an ox and 20 sheep to be killed on Monday to provide meat for the week. Frequently the servants had 100 beds to make up The general kept for his own and his friends' use 20 saddle horses and several pairs of carriage horses. The hospitality was unbounded Everything that could be desired was provided that would contribute to the entertainment or comfort of guests

Here they had another flock of French emigres as visitors Here came Talleyrand and the Duke de Liancourt, from Philadelphia, and many others Here, too, came the Viscount de Troailles, brother-in-law of Lafayette, Lord Ashburton and many prominent Americans

While this gay party remained the wilds of Maine were enlivened by the most brilliant of the society of the capital, for Philadelphia furnished a regiment of guests regularly for Montpelier

A glorious place was Montpelier but when General Knox died in 1806 it became a place of gloom Thereafter the woman who had been the first arbiter of society in the Republic shunned all social gatherings Near the home he loved the general was buried, and for the 18 years of her widowhood there never was a day that she did not visit his tomb

Mirandy on Selecting a Life Mate

By DOROTHY DIX.

"Date's plenty of signs to pint out de kind of a husband a man is gwine to make, but dere ain't none of 'em safe to go by."

"De odder night," said Mirandy, "Ma'y Jane was a-readin' to me in de paper where dat actor man, Mr Nat Goodwin's maw say dat she don't know why in de name of goodness dat he has so much trauble wid his wives, because he sho'ly am a good son She suttenly does give him a good name dat he's affectionate, an kind an generous, an' don't never forget to write home, an' dat hit looks to her dat such a model son ought to make a husband dat'll please even a actor lady, what, dey tells me, hits mighty hard for anybody to hold down a steady job wid in de husband line.

"'Dat is funny' says Ma'y Jane, what ain't had no 'sperience in de matermonial line yit, for hit looks lak a good son ought to make a good husband'

"'Not at all,' 'spons I, 'far from hit. Becaze a man is a good son ain't no more sign dat he'll ... a good husband dan hit is dat ... [illegible] puddin' Don't you go an' marry any man jest becaze he's got a recommend as a good son, onless you wants to land in de divorsh court.'

His Mother's Biscuits.

"'How's dat?' axes Ma'y Jane

"'Well,' 'spons I, 'I ain't atalkin' about dis heah Mr. Goodwin who, from what I hears is got de marryin habit an' can't break hisself of hit but when you hears an ordinary fellow spoke of as de pattern son an' brother, you jest shy off from him becase ef you marries him you will find out dat he'll make one of dese heah kind of husbands dat thinks dat his wife ought to play second fiddle to his mother as long as she lives, an' what will throw his mother's biscuit in his wife's face every time he sets down to de table; an' ev'ry time his wife ... [illegible] many years his ... [illegible] acle wukker what fed her fambly on de fat of de land widout ever havin' to spend no money on de butcher or de grocer.

Worse That Tips On Weather.

"'Hit's a noble thing,' says I, 'for a man to be a model son, an' I hopes to goodness dat I'se raisin' up my boy Thomas Jefferson Abraham Lincoln to be one, but bein' as how you is my daughter I wants to perfect you from gittin' some other mother's darling if I can'

"'But, Maw' says Ma'y Jane, 'ain't dere no signs dat pints out de kind of a husband dat a man is gwine to make'

"'Dare's plenty of signs,' 'spons I, 'but dere ain't none of dem dat hit's safe to go by Dey is lak dese heah wedder predictions. Sometimes dey hit an' agin dey don't, an' you never can tell befo' hand which way they's gwine to turn out.

[illegible] heah domestic husbands dat's always a purrin' around de hearth of a evenin', lak de fambly cat, an' you looks around for a fellow what's got de earmarks of domesticity about him, an' you says

"'Mah goodness, if Jake ain't hit, den I don't know one of dese heah home-keepin' husbands when I sees him!'

"'An' den you marries him an' you finds out dat dat was a false sign, an' dat de man dat you most had to sweep out of yo' house wid de broom to git rid of him, befo' marriage, you can't hold in de house wid a lock an' chain after marriage.

A Yale Lock On His Purse.

"'An' maybe you thinks dat you'd lak to marry a man what's generous, an' what won't dole out de chicken feed to you lak he was partin' wid his last eye tooth ev'y time dat he gives you a nickel an' so you listens wid yo' year to de ground, an' you hears ev'ybody a-singin' de praises of Sam for bein' so liberal, an sayin' dat he sho'ly has got de open hand

"'So you marry Sam an' lo and behold you finds out dat he is one of dese men dat will fling his money down on de bar an set em up for de crowd, an' den lambast his wife be are she done buy herself a 49-cent shirtwaist, an' dat whilst he is de fust to put his name down on de subscription list to buy a gold watch an' chain for de policeman, he lets his wife take in washin to buy de pork chops for de fambly Hit ain't no sign ... dat a man ain't gwine to have a Yale lock on his pocketbook at home becaze he carries hit wide open in public

"'Or maybe you's sort of set yo' heart on marryin one of dese heah peaceable men what would be easy to git along wid an' what will make materimony a glad sweet song as de poet says instead of de battleground dat de fambly circle mostly is So you casts yo' eye around for a man dat looks real easy an' dat appears lak you could wrop around yo' finger widout strainin' yo' constitution any in de doin' of hit, an' yo' eye lights on Jim, an' you hears folks a-singin' his praises wharever you goes.

"'Me for dat angel disposition,' you says, an' you goes out an' ... [illegible] in' dat you suttinly has got de prize package.

"'But what happens? Likely as not, dat man is done used up so much amiability bein' pleasant an' perlite to strangers dat he ain't got none left for home consumption. Some of de most cantankerous men dat I ever seed in dere own houses was dat mild away from home dat butter wouldn't have melted in dere mouths. Becaze a man is popular away from home ain't no sign dat he's gwine to make de sort of a man dat is popular wid his own wife.'

Must Marry to Find Out.

"'But, Maw,' says Ma'y Jane, 'how is anybody gwine to tell, den, what sort of a husband a man is gwine to turn out?'

"'Dere ain't no way to tell' says I 'You'se got to marry him to find out An' den hit's too late for yo' knowledge to do you any good.'"

PRIMITIVE TRIBES OF OLD MEXICO

From the Kansas City Journal

Sinaloa is a long state comparable almost with Chile as it lies along the west coast of Mexico just as Chile lies along the Pacific shore of South America

Like most new countries the most interesting part of this fertile state is its inhabitants possibly because the [illegible] abundant [illegible] of the great pithaya cactus is ripe almost from season to season. Every native whether mounted or afoot and most of them ride carries a slender stick 10 feet long sharpened at one end and the point hardened with fire

One supposes these sticks are a sort of primitive lance until one sees the Indian spear a cactus fruit from a branch seven or eight feet above his head These pithayas contain many seeds and a little blood red pulp all of which except the spines is food for the Indian.

All day long these Indian men wander through the jungle, a ... of [illegible] wild cattle, [illegible] ing the cactus fruit It would seem that some would be dried, or at least taken to the brush jacal which represents home to the Indian but no he sits down and eats what he gathers immediately. If his wife wants any of the fruit she goes and gets it herself; she also gathers the food for the babies.

I was following one of the cactus gatherers in a winding cattle trail when I came suddenly on a little natural clearing Here were half a dozen people seated on the ground, all working on wooden dishes, platter shaped and each large enough to hold an entire meal The wood they were carving was freshly cut from the jungle trees their tools were bits of old band iron, secured in the railroad junk heaps. It is only a few months however, since these bits of iron have replaced the stone adzes of [illegible] years. The coming of the railroad less than a year ago brought the iron and even yet the Indians attempt to sharpen their crude chisels by rubbing them on stones.

He replied "Will Jim win? Of course he will. Jim always wins" The parents of Jim Jeffries live in a delightful [illegible] on a knoll in the [illegible] of a town [illegible] Los Angeles, Cal

Ten Reasons Why You Should Invest In

Park Lawn Addition

Residence Property Now

1. Prices are lower than they will ever be again owing to the increasing demand for this class of property.
2. Possesses all the advantages of the city, street car service, city water, sewerage, gas, electric lights, etc., together with freedom from the discomforts of dust, smoke and noise.
3. Proximity to one of the best grade schools in Colorado Springs school system.
4. Unsurpassed views in all directions, being high enough to overlook all obstructions in every quarter.
5. Restrictions will insure desirable class of permanent investors.
6. A prudent investor will always place his money where it is likely to bring him the quickest returns in rentals or sales.
7. The Northwest portion of this city having been built upon and improved as far north as it is likely to go at present, the northeast portion is bound to be in demand, the trend being all in this direction.
8. Compare prices of property in northwest portion of city with prices asked in Park Lawn and then compare advantages.
9. A park of over 200 acres adjoins this beautiful addition on the east comparable to Monument Valley Park. This park is a golf course in the center of which stands a spacious and attractive club house of modern design.

BEAR CREEK MINES FURNISH SURPRISES

REMARKABLE DISCOVERIES IN SAN JUAN COUNTY.

Shipments of Ore Rich in Sylvanite and Calaverite Coming Out by Pack Train.

SILVERTON, Colo, July 16.—Bear Creek district in the southeastern part of San Juan county is coming to the front as one of the most interesting mineral sections of the state. During the last few months two remarkable discoveries were made which are attracting widespread attention.

The first was in the Gold Bug, when Martin Tully and his partner opened a large chimney of rich ore, almost simultaneously in the first and third levels, some 300 feet apart.

Then followed the discovery in the Kankakee by D. Preston Bell. From both these mines regular shipments by the expensive pack train of rich assorted gold ore streaked and spotted with sylvanite and calaverite are the order of the day.

Now comes Fred Barry, an old prospector, with a new strike in the Hercules group, of a peculiar character of ore, but which in richness and quantity threatens to rival the discoveries made in the Kankakee and Gold Bug Barry brought several large pieces of the ore to the city and a sample selected to represent a general average gave returns of 34.06 ounces in gold and 17 64 ounces in silver.

The group, which embraces three recently located claims, known as the Hercules, Extension and Comet, is about one and one-half miles north of the Kankakee and is undoubtedly one of the series or system of telluride veins which, trending in a northerly direction from that property, pass through the Hercules group and continues on toward Stony Pass, Maggie and Minnie gulches. It constitutes another strike in the now well established gold belt which follows closely the crest of the continental divide between San Juan and Hinsdale counties.

This find of Barry's is only one of many in this mineral belt within the last year in old and new locations, among the richer being the All O. K., Parallel and Mountain Eagle in Minnie gulch, the Bunker Hill and Gold Nugget in Maggie gulch, the Buffalo Boy on Stony pass, the Gold Bug, Kankakee and now the Hercules on Bear creek.

Some of the ore Barry brought to town is freely spotted with sylvanite and chlorides of silver. The vein lies along the western edge of a gigantic porphyry dike which traverses that section, and, taken in connection with the other strikes of the belt mentioned, is regarded by San Juan experts and mining men who are familiar with that country, as a strike of more than ordinary importance.

WHEN TO WATER FLOWERS

From the Washington Star.

Watering in the evening, besides aiding in the spread of fungus diseases, also causes "damping off." Watering should never be practiced during heavy, cloudy weather. Shade, heat, and light should be considered Plants growing in the bright sunlight always need more water than those in the shade, for evaporation and transpiration are always greater under such circumstances Midday watering, when the sun shines directly on the foliage, will burn the foliage of many of our common house plants Shading during excessive heat will strengthen the plants and assist in retaining moisture.

Temperature, both of air and water, should be considered An overheated and humid atmosphere will cause straggly, spindly growth, very susceptible to disease The temperature of the water used has been found to have a marked effect on plants. It has been found that the best results are obtained when water of about the same temperature as the room in which the plant is growing is used

Although watering should not be carried on so that a constantly wet soil is the result the watering should always be thorough The receptacle in which the plant grows should always have one or more holes in the bottom, and when enough water has been supplied these should be dripping with water which has run through the soil and is ...

FOUR DREDGES BUSY NEAR BRECKENRIDGE

RIVER BEDS YIELD HARVEST OF PRECIOUS METAL

Operators Set Million Dollars as Mark for Season—Lode Mines Also Working Regularly.

(By Captain James T. Smith in the Rocky Mountain News).

The four dredge plants now being operated on the placers in and near Breckenridge have set $1,000,000 as their mark for the season of 1910. Work this far has been steady, with few interruptions since the middle of March, and no delays of moment on account of breakages. Extra pieces of machinery are on hand to prevent in voluntary idleness, while the excellent machine shops, constructed some years ago by the Gold Pan company, come in handy for repairs. Reports for the mint in Denver go out regularly—with no flourish of trumpets, however, as the wild Western holdup is not yet extinct and does not confine his operations to the moving pictures or the yellow-back novels.

Up French gulch, where the boulders are more numerous than in the Swan river placers, the values are averaging, this season, 45 cents to the cubic yard. On the Swan river placers the average value is less—23 to 25 cents per cubic yard but the work is easier and cheap, as large boulders are less frequent and there is little or no use for the electric "feeler," an appliance which proves useful on the Reiling plant, the property of the California dredging trust. B Stanley Revett's dredge, also in French gulch, is now in rich ground, having finished a term at prospecting for values. The Lewisohns of New York, who own the Swan river placers, are taking out very close to $1,000 each day. The company, known on the exchanges as the Colorado Gold Dredging company, pays regular dividends on a $12,000,000 capital. Manager Lohman was a student at the Colorado School of Mines and is a systematic, up-to-date operator. From the Reiling dredge, which Colonel Reiling of Denver attends to a $12,000 retort was shipped the other day. This plant is famous for its gold nuggets, it being equipped with special devices for detecting them in the gravel and sorting them out.

Rhode Island Venture.

Colonel Kingsbury, who represents Rhode Island capital, is now ready for an active campaign on the placer grounds near Dillon, 11 miles down the Blue river from Breckenridge His company controls valuable water rights and 1,500 acres of high-bar placer, which tests 10 to 40 cents in gold to the cubic yard. The colonel has ordered a pair of large power shovels, similar to those in use on the Panama canal, for the purpose of breaking down the ground and preparing it for the sluices, where the coarse gold and nuggets will be collected. One of these shovels is now on the way from the point of manufacture, and preparations are going forward for active work at the earliest possible moment. In former seasons, with the old washing method in use, this placer was good for $60,000 in gold each year

The Jessie group of gold placers and lode mines, operated for many years on a paying basis by Chicago capital, is about to pass into the hands of a new company, in which District Attorney Hogan is interested The new company is capitalized at $1 500,000 Of this amount, the former owners take 49 per cent, leaving 51 per cent for the fresh promotion and for working capital. There are 42 patented claims in the group. The ore is partly oxidized, and fair values—$4 to $12 per ton in gold—are secured in the 40-stamp mill, which will probably be helped by a cyanide plant to insure a better saving of values At times the ore runs high in lead and also yields silver, but gold is the main reliance The ore veins are large and promise to be lasting. The mines and mill have been idle since the financial disturbance in the fall of 1907.

Wellington Enterprise.

At the Wellington mines and mill operations are regular This property is owned in Kansas City and Breckenridge and is a steady shipper of high-grade zinc and lead concentrates A new electric tram—the only one of its class in the county conveys material from the dumps to the mill when the ore supply from the mines is slack ... A magnetic separator will soon be added to sort out the iron values now collected in a special dump

The Sally Barber and the Little Sally Barber zinc mines, owned in Canon City, are doing very little at present, as the quotations for zinc is rather low. This is also true of the Country Boy, owned in Colorado Springs, from which 60 per cent zinc ore was frequently shipped in 1907 when quotations were in excess of $4 per 100 pounds. These companies have the ore and can ship when the profits suit them

In Frisco camp, below Breckenridge, the King Solomon group has cut high-grade lead-silver ores yielding 78 per cent lead and 58 ounces in silver to the ton, from a pay streak measuring two to nine feet in width Manager Dinsmore will be ready to ship as soon as his development program is a little farther advanced. Some gold and copper values appear in the ore The King Solomon tunnel has progressed 4,300 feet, and is large enough for mine drainage and double-track transportation. It has cut a large number of ore veins, the last one giving it 2,196 feet of stoping ground between the tunnel and surface, at which the ore vein plainly crops. It is an ambitious project and promises to place Frisco on the map as a liberal ore shipper before 1910 closes

MINERAL FARM TO RESUME

OURAY, Colo., July 16.—John Erickson has received instructions from R. J. Lucas of St. Louis, who is the owner of Mineral Farm, to start operations on that property at once. The work will be done in the old workings of the property, where a shaft will be sunk to the lime contact. Where the property was opened in the more recent workings a large body of ore was exposed in a blanket vein which was prospected to considerable extent and found to be continuous. Some of the ore was a very high-grade gray copper, though the main body was lead silver ore that ran up to a good milling average.

The opening of the old workings as contemplated at this time is expected to result in disclosing another portion of the blanket vein, which may be considered one of the largest ore bodies in this part of the country.

The Legal Tender group is another located on the same contact and will be developed during the summer by sinking the shaft, which is already down over 200 feet, to the contact where the ore body is located.

The Plata Cache group, which joins the Mineral Farm on the west, is another which will probably be opened during the summer.

Manager Joseph H Tumbach of the Colorado Smelter company has taken possession of the pyritic smelter plant north of town, arrangements having been completed for the taking over of the smelter by the company It is probable that the work of remodeling will be started within the next few days, though nothing is given out here by the local management to that effect With the starting of this plant a large number of properties about Ouray, especially those north of the city, will be opened up and start shipping to the plant.

THE REAL THING

"Speaking of joy rides, did you ever have a real one?"

"No."

"Never got out in a buggy along a shady lane, with a plug of a horse and the only girl in the world? Say, you don't know what life is!"

JUVENILE LOGIC WASTED.

From the Brooklyn Eagle

The infant has been at it again.

"Dad," he asked, "does it cost much to keep a lion?"

"It does, my son."

"A wolf would make a good meal for a lion, wouldn't it, dad?"

"Yes."

"I suppose so. Go on and play."

"A fox would be satisfied with a hawk and a sparrow would satisfy a hawk, eh, dad?"

"H m! If you don't go away "

"And a spider would make a meal for a sparrow. "

"Yes, yes! Now "

"Ye-es, my son"

"And a drop of molasses would be enough for a fly, wouldn't it?"

"Well, suppose it would?"

"Yes; that's just it, dad. Now, what I want you to tell me is this Could a man keep a lion for more than a year with a quart of molasses?"

And then the sound of a falling slipper awoke the echoes of the stilly night.

A FITTING TRIBUTE.

From the San Francisco Chronicle

The stage manager of the Frostville Academy of Music was laughing at the unlucky actor who had stopped the egg thrown from the gallery

"And it was such an appropriate egg too!" chuckled the unfeeling stage manager

"Appropriate?" growled the actor; "what do you mean by that, you bone head?"

"Why you know the scene was laid in the Bad Lands?"

"Yes?"

"And judging from its odor, I guess the egg also was laid there!"

In addition to the $175 000 000 worth of merchandise there was received from Alaska $15 000 000 worth of gold of domestic production during the last ...

SIDELIGHTS ON THE WORLD'S NEWS

WORLD FAMOUS FLYERS AND THEIR PLANS

By CHARLES N. LURIE.

TO try to tell what the aviators are going to do next is like trying to crash a roof from the ground for a better view. the moment a cry of "Here he comes!" announces the approach of one of the man birds. By the time you get where there is an unobstructed view the flier is gone. The air records are falling so fast nowadays—much faster and more frequently than the men who make them that any prediction is open to serious objection that it will be out of date by the time it gets into print.

With these words of explanation, or possibly of apology, let us assert that the great aerial event toward which the persons interested in flying, which means the whole world, are looking is the race between St. Louis and New York over a 1,000 mile course for a prize of $15,000 offered by the New York World and the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. Of scarcely less interest is the projected Chicago-New York flight of about 960 miles for a $25,000 prize offered by the New York Times and the Chicago [illegible]. In addition to these there are the Washington-New York race, the Detroit-Buffalo flight, the Kansas City-St. Louis contest and many others. The total of the prizes offered by the cities and the newspapers is large enough to bring to America the most famous of the old world's aviators, as well as to engage the attention of our own best men, especially since the variation of the temporary Wright injunctions left the foreigners free to come.

Among those who are interested in these imagination compelling contests are the aviators who have recently brought the world to a realization of the fact that the flying machine has come to take its place among the world's commonplaces with wireless telegraphy, radium, the X rays, the telephone and other inventions. They are Glenn H. Curtiss, who made the air trip from Albany to New York; Charles K. Hamilton, whose aerial journey from New York to Philadelphia and back gave assurance that such trips can be made hereafter on schedule time; Charles S. Rolls, the Englishman who flew across the English channel to France, turned in the air and returned without alighting to England; Louis Paulhan, who flew from London to Manchester for a $50,000 prize and who held until recently the world's record for height attained in an aeroplane; Graham White, the plucky Englishman who tried so hard to win the London-Manchester contest and failed only after he had gone the limit of present endurance in the air; the Wrights, pioneer flyers, who have held steadfastly to their view that flying is with them a business proposition, not a sport, and have heretofore refused to engage in merely spectacular flights, although permitting the entry of their machines under the operation of others. All these and others of national and international fame have expressed their intense interest in the coming contests and have asserted their belief that the prizes offered are well worth consideration.

In addition to these great events on the future programs of the aviators there are numerous smaller affairs to be held in the United States and abroad. No state or county [illegible] is considered up to date which [illegible] announces as a part of its list of attractions aerial flights by one or more of the world's flyers. Of course the flyers come high—no pun intended—but the fairs must have them or be considered hopelessly behind the times. The old fashioned balloon ascension cannot draw a crowd nowadays, so the fair authorities are failing over one another in their endeavors to get the aviators. The supply of flyers is limited, although it is said a every day, so the men who are able to travel in these regions instead of two are taking advantage of their opportunities and demanding stiff prices for their work. Any aviator who has seen them perform their daring feats in the air will agree that almost any price is too low for the risks they run. The 1910 international aviation meet, which will be the greatest ever held, will take place on Long Island in October. It was brought to this country by Glenn H. Curtiss who [illegible] at Rheims last year.

With the extension of flying over the world's civilized countries has come the discussion of rules for the government of the flyers when they are in the air. The subject is still in the tentative state, but there has been enough interest manifested in the matter to make it certain that the near future will see the promulgation of a set of rules agreed to by the world's most famous flyers. Speaking on this subject recently, Mr. Frederic R. Coudert, recently returned from a visit to France, said:

"The presence of so many flying machines in France and the complaints of owners of property that aviators are flying over gardens and thus intruding into private domains has caused the calling of a commission of prominent lawyers.

"They have had operators of aeroplanes perform before them, flying both low and high, in order to determine what height is proper. Count Lambert has been one of these demonstrators. Of course there are property owners who assert that their rights extend far up into the sky, but to recognize such rights would mean a stop to all aviation.

"There is not the slightest doubt that a certain height will be determined and that France will be the pioneer country in the framing of laws to apply to tracks in the sky. Property rights will have to be protected. The Frenchman's garden, with its high wall, has been declared safe from prying eyes of aviators, but even with an aviator swooping near with his machine well, something must and will be done."

HAMLIN GARLAND, CONSERVATIONIST

WHEN the history of the movement for the conservation of the natural resources of the nation is written high on the roll of honor of the men engaged in the fight on the right side, with those of Roosevelt, Pinchot and others will be that of a teller of tales, Hamlin Garland.

The country contains no more enthusiastic believer in the west, "the new west," and its future, than Mr. Garland. His devotion to the cause of intelligent conservation of our mines and forests, our fields and plains, our men and women, requires no explanation. For years in his books and on the lecture platform he has been preaching the gospel of the mission of the west to regenerate, to maintain the nation. In his latest book, "Cavanagh: Forest Ranger," he carries his propaganda a step farther and comes out openly and boldly without reserve in support of the Pinchot forest policy. In the mouth of the hero of the book, Ross Cavanagh, the author puts the words:

"I am glad to be known as a defender of the forest. A tree means much to me. I never mark one for felling without a sense of responsibility for the future."

It is this "sense of responsibility for the future" frankly avowed, together with a most interesting story of life in the new west, that makes up the body of Mr. Garland's latest book. In it he devotes considerable space—not to the detriment of the book as a study, however—to a defense and an exposition of the forest preservation theories of Gifford Pinchot, the recently dismissed chief forester. The latter is depicted as the idol of the body of strong, able, clean living young men whom he trained in the forest service, and his dismissal from the service is described as a severe blow to the personnel of the service. Mr. Pinchot contributes a preface to the book.

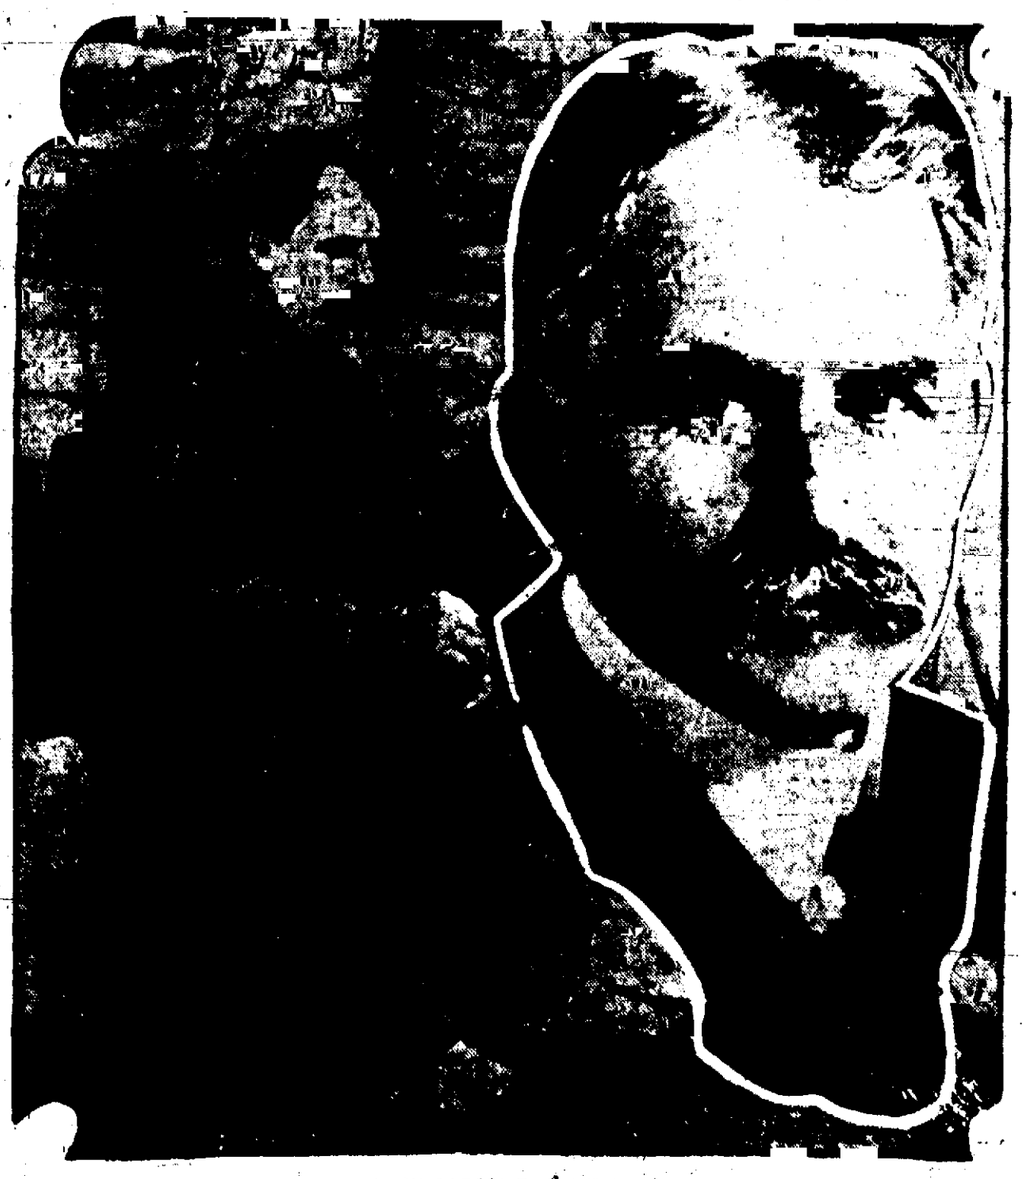

For a score of years Mr. Garland has been known to the public through his writing and his lectures, as an ardent believer in America's future. In a book published sixteen years ago he said:

"There is coming in this land the greatest assertion in art of the rights of man and the glory of the physical universe ever made in the world. It will be done not by one man, but by many men and women. It will be born, not of drawing room culture nor of high station nor of fear of masters, nor will it come from homes of great wealth. It will come from the average American home in the city as well as in the country. It will deal with all kinds and conditions. It will be born of the mingling seas of men in the vast interior of America, because there the problem of the perpetuity of our democracy, the question of the liberty as well as the nationality of our art, will be fought out."

Some idea of the intense, enthusiastic [illegible] explosion of the [illegible] will be gained from the [illegible] has lived his life up to the present time in harmony with his beliefs. The half century that has passed since his birth on a farm at West Salem, Wis., has served only to deepen and broaden in him the development of a belief in America, its institutions and its resources, its men and women and its future, and he has expressed his belief well in his writings and lectures. More than twenty books from his pen bear witness to his industry.

Among the best known of the Garland books are "Rose of Dutcher's Coolley," "Hesper," "The Captain of the Gray Horse Troop," "Ulysses Grant" (a biography) and "Prairie Songs" (verse). He was educated in the common schools of Mitchell county, Ia., and was graduated in the literary course of the Cedar Valley seminary, Osage, Ia., in 1884. After teaching school in the west for a short time and farming a claim in Dakota he went to Boston and began to earn his living by his writings. In 1893 Mr. Garland returned to the west and has remained there save for the time he has spent in traveling. He was married in 1899 to Zulime Taft, a sister of the famous sculptor, Lorado Taft, and herself a sculptor and art critic of note. The Garlands make their home in Chicago, but the writer cultivates in the summer his farm in Wisconsin.

From his earliest years Mr. Garland manifested an interest in the Indian tribes, and he has made extensive researches into their history, ethnology and present conditions. His activity in their behalf led to his selection several years ago by President Roosevelt as a commissioner to investigate the practicability of renaming all the Indians of the United States, the plan being to give them family names so that any rights they possess in the land might be defined and respected and, perhaps, perpetuated.

AMERICA DEVELOPS VIOLIN GENIUS

RECOGNITION at last as one of the greatest living American violinists, worthy to rank with Kreisler, Ysaye, Kubelik, the European masters of the bow such is the happy distinction that has come to Albert Spalding of Chicago, who has taken entrance [illegible] with his skill on his beautiful instrument.

Spalding returned early in June from a long sojourn in Europe, where he won many plaudits, to spend the summer at Monmouth Beach, N. J., with his family and will go back to the old world in the autumn to begin his 1910-11 concert tour, of [illegible] capitals.

Whether or not Spalding is the "future Paganini," as one of his ardent admirers called him, is a matter of problematic future revelation. In one respect at least Spalding resembles the famous virtuoso of a century ago—that is, in the instant recognition his genius has won from the critics of foreign lands. As Paganini toured Europe, meeting with appreciation of his genius wherever he went, so Spalding has been hailed in Europe as one of the greatest of living violinists. France, England, Germany, Russia, all have paid tribute to his mastery of technique and the wonderful, indescribable appeal of his tone to the [illegible] and the lay hearer. Throughout there has been but very little unfavorable criticism, and whatever carping of this sort has found its way into print has invariably been modified by words of warmest praise. Probably never before in the history of American music—though that has been lamentably brief and undistinguished—has an instrumentalist from this country met with so favorable a reception by the critics of the old world.

Spalding recently concluded a tour on the continent. He will tour Europe again in the musical season of 1910-11 and will visit America during the season of 1911-12. His triumphs abroad insure him an ovation in his native land, where he has appeared before in concerts. Some extracts from the French critics' comments on his playing read as follows:

"He has classed himself among the greatest violinists of the age."

"Qualities which we noted were sufficient to class the violinist among the greatest."

"Albert Spalding is one of the best violinists of our epoch."

American critics have been equally enthusiastic over their young compatriot. When he played in concert in 1908 in Carnegie hall, in New York, Reginald De Koven, the famous composer and musical critic, said:

"I saw a clean cut, almost typical American youth, good to look upon, without the smallest pose or affectation in hair or manner, evidently artistic, as evidently whole souled and simple. Then he played, and I heard what I must sensibly violin playing of a high order. [illegible] it by [illegible] passages or rarely pure harmonics. Altogether Mr Spalding must be credited with a distinct success on his merits as an artist, and there seems no reason why maturity and deeper experience of life should not develop what is now remarkable talent into commanding genius."

That was a year and a half ago. European critics before whom Spalding has played since the time when that criticism was penned agree that Spalding's playing now shows greater maturity of tone, more commanding personal force, more ripening into genius of the talent which De Koven noted.

Spalding's music comes to him naturally, by inheritance from his mother. She was a [illegible] before her marriage. A few years ago she said to an interviewer:

"At the very first, when he was a little bit of a fellow, two or three years old and he would sit so quietly and patiently beside me while I played the piano. I used to assure myself it was because he loved me. It seemed incredible that a child so young could be appealed to so strongly by music. Then I was so anxious, so fairly wild for him to love it, that I used to try to argue myself out of the belief that there was anything phenomenal about his evident passion for it. I was dreadfully afraid of getting my hopes up only to suffer disappointment.

"When Albert was seven years old we had returned one afternoon from a concert. He was very quiet and seemed to be thinking. Suddenly he said, 'Mother, I would like a violin.' Of course I was amazed. He was so young to say such a thing. 'You could not play it, my son, if you had it,' I told him, but he answered, 'Yes, I could. I could learn.' Well, as it turned out, he got the violin. That is just about all there is to tell."

TO CELEBRATE OPENING OF THE PORTLAND MILL

Special to The Gazette.

CRIPPLE CREEK July [illegible] The formal opening of the new Portland mill will take place Tuesday. The directors of the company together with a number of invited guests and correspondents will come to the district on the first Short Line train which leaves Colorado Springs at 8 30 o'clock. The party will have a special coach attached to the regular train This coach will be switched at Vindicator and taken to the mill

The directors and visitors will be shown through the mill and at noon luncheon will be served

July 19 is the anniversary of the breaking of the first ground for the new mill In one year the mill has been constructed and in operation a month and has made a profit of several thousand dollars.

As this is the first mill through a new secret process to handle successfully the low grade ores peculiar to this district, it is of vital interest to the people here It means an addition of a quarter of a century of life to the district

Gaylord Mill Cleanup.

A gold retort estimated at $4,167 representing the clean up of the tanks at the Gaylord mill on the Jerry Johnson property was sent today to the mint in Denver This mill is successfully treating low grade ores from the mine and dump Twelve cyanide tanks are in use

Inspect Rexall Operations.

Charles Knight president and general manager of the Rexall Mining company and D M Billings of Amherst Mass a prominent stockholder of this company were visitors yesterday in Victor where the mine is located They came here from Denver on a regular trip of inspection It is said shipments from this property will be resumed shortly

Golden Cycle Examination.

Upon good authority it is said that D. D Muir mining expert is finishing his work of examining the Golden Cycle property for the Goldfields Consolidated Mines company of London. Though Muir has said nothing, indications point to the belief that his work will be finished within a week. In the last few days the experts have spent a good share of the time rechecking work they went over when first in the mine

As the Golden Cycle option expires July 31 there yet remains 15 days in which to complete the deal Should the Goldfields Consolidated Mines company decide to purchase the property, it is probable another 30 days extension on the option will be asked, to give the buyers a chance to look into the title of the property

In the purchase of the Strattons Independence the Venture company paid a Denver lawyer $100,000 to look into the title. This item in itself will be no small transaction

Draining Eclipse Mine

The lifting of the surface water in the Eclipse mine is progressing steadily. In nine weeks through the use of a 500-gallon bucket the water has been lowered 275 feet out of a total of 500 feet In the draining of this property the Rose Nicol and Carbonate Queen claims as well as other properties on the west slope of Battle mountain have been drained About 85 or 90 buckets of water are hoisted each shift [illegible] Reed in charge of the workings operating for a Denver leasing company is keeping two shifts working A large electric hoist is used It is expected the shaft will be drained in three weeks

Dexter Lease Shipping

Upon excellent authority it is said five cars were shipped last month from the Dexter lease operated by Charles and Oscar Anderson of Victor and the Stinkleman brothers of Denver The ore is being mined at 880 feet on a vein believed to be the extension of the Trail vein. The ore is broken seven feet between walls, although the values lie in a five-inch streak Assays in the thousands can be secured from this streak. With the waste rock from the vein, which is barren the average run of the ore is $17, as settled for last month. This streak is of sylvanite and [illegible].

The 652 registered trade unions of Great Britain have a total membership of 2,000,000.

GEORGETOWN LEASER MAKES RICH STRIKE

GEORGETOWN, July 16 —J W Crandall, leasing on the Scepter property, on Democrat mountain, had down a shipment of ore this week that brought a settlement of 270 ounces in silver to the ton This leaser has one of the best-paying blocks of ground in the district and stoping is in progress upon a streak of ore that is from 12 to 16 inches wide Operations are being carried forward 2 900 feet from the portal of the tunnel the ore vein having been exposed for a length of 100 feet

It is the opinion of mining men familiar with the country being prospected that this operator has found the continuation of the ore shoot that was worked out a number of years ago In this event work is being prosecuted on the Astor vein There remains about 400 feet of virgin territory overhead to be prospected.

Strike on Elephantine

The crosscut tunnel being driven on the Elephantine group of claims situated on Covode mountain intersected another vein the latter part of last week. The lode was intersected 185 feet from the portal of the tunnel and while the hanging-wall has not been reached, the entire vein matter is mineralized This lode runs at right angles with the tunnel so it will probably be necessary to drive a considerable distance before the opposite wall is reached A number of producers lie in close proximity in some instances the extensions of rich veins being controlled. It is the intention of the owners to continue development throughout the balance of the summer and fall months

Reliance Developments.

The showing on the property of the Reliance Gold Mines corporation is daily improving, and indications are that shipments will be inaugurated at no distant date Since the Sporting Times vein was intersected by the crosscut driven from the adit tunnel on the Moore vein drifting has been in progress A small streak of heavy lead ore has been followed for 15 feet, tests showing values of from $60 to $70 to the ton This drift will be continued for 85 feet when the heading will cut directly under the old shaft that is down to a depth of 90 feet A raise will then be put through to secure a natural circulation of air The raise, when completed, will be 200 feet in height

MAY TRACE SHOOT INTO FANNY RAWLINGS

LEADVILLE Colo July 16 —The St Louis Tunnel people have secured a lease on the 250 feet of the north end of the Fanny Rawlings and at present the shaft is being unwatered and retimbered Manager Stewart is of the opinion that the rich streak in the St Louis tunnel will be found in this territory he bases his opinion from the fact that in one part of the property a small streak was found in an upraise when the property was last worked which carried good values in gold, and he thinks that this streak when developed will lead to the main vein

SEATON VEIN IS OPENED FROM NEWHOUSE TUNNEL

IDAHO SPRINGS Colo July 16 — The Seaton Investment company has been drifting west on that vein from the Newhouse tunnel and in the breast of the drift, which is in 400 feet, has come into a fine streak of ore over a foot wide which assays $34 per ton This vein is one of the old producers in Seaton mountain and it is expected the property will soon be placed on the active shipping list

DEVELOPMENT PLANNED AT GRAND ENCAMPMENT

GRAND ENCAMPMENT, Wyo, July 16 —If the plans of the Continental-Morris Mining company materialize, there will soon be some very important developments in progress up near the headwaters of Cow creek Dr. G A Leach, secretary and treasurer of the company, with J F Hatcher and J W Kelcher, have been here looking over the property and outlining plans for future operations.

Dr Leach stated that all interested parties now consider the property of the company to be worthy of thorough development Their present plans will provide for the installation of mining machinery and also the erection of suitable reduction works at the mine as soon as they are required. The water power that can be developed right at this property is a valuable aid to the economical operation of a milling plant and other machinery

The Continental-Morris company is a consolidation of the Continental and the Morris companies and includes the property of both. Present development consists of a 165-foot shaft and a tunnel which is now being driven under contract for 200 feet of work. Copper values are in evidence in both shaft and tunnel and there are other ledges not yet opened which offer indications of ore The present shaft is to be sunk to depth and the rest of the ground explored by tunnel

The company has taken steps to increase its capital stock to 5,000,000 shares.

WILL SUPPLY POWER TO BOULDER MINES

Electric Current to Be Transmitted Throughout Country—New Plant Nearly Finished.

BOULDER, July 16 —In about 15 days McArthur Brothers, who have the contract on the great concrete dam at Nederland which they are building for the Central Colorado Power company, will complete the work and about August 1 the installation of machinery at the power house will be finished and the great plant will be ready for its initial run

Early next month the company will celebrate the completion of its project in Boulder county by a reception at the power house to which prominent men throughout the state will be invited to witness the operation of the plant

The completion of the Boulder enterprise in connection with the Shoshone plant, will insure Boulder county miners a constant current and a service that is not surpassed anywhere

Thos L Wood, manager of the Zophar company at Wallstreet which is operating the old Wood Mountain mine and mill states that the mill is now making its initial run after the overhauling and installation of Monell tables

Everything is running along smoothly and within a day or two the mill will run night and day on ore from the mine Mr Wood is confident that it will not be necessary to install cyanide tanks to get the best results

Manager Scroglond of the Nugget mine and mill near Rowena was in town a few days ago with a retort valued at over $2 000 the result of a clean-up after a two weeks run at the mill About $1 000 a week is being taken from the plates the ore values being principally in free gold

Owing to the low stage of water in Left Hand creek the mill can not be run at its maximum capacity or a larger output could be made Negotiations are on for the extension of the transmission line of the Central Colorado Power company to the mines and mill and if satisfactory arrangements can be made regarding the extension of the lease electric power will be employed and operations conducted on a larger scale

It is proposed also to add to the value-saving machinery

There were fewer deaths to the thousand of population in Philadelphia last year than ever before in the city's history.

TELLURIDE SHIPMENTS LARGELY INCREASED

Value of June Output Estimated at $250,000—New Operations in San Miguel County.

TELLURIDE, Colo, July 16.—Shipments of concentrates from Telluride in June totaled 124 carloads against 67 for June, 1909. An average of 25 tons a car makes the total 3,100 tons of concentrates. A well-informed mine manager says that an average of 12 tons of crude ore to one ton of concentrates is a fair estimate. This means an ore output of 37,200 tons. The value of the June output is over $250,000.

The Black Bear company at its recent annual meeting, elected Oscar Mantyla president, Henry Keanta secretary-treasurer, Isaac Nevala vice president and Jacob Kreklia, Lee Hesto and Isaac Matis of Telluride, Jacob Ojanpera of Cokato, Minn, and J. J Eveleth, Minnesota, directors It is running four stoping drills and two other drills and producing about 35 per cent zinc and 50 lead with some gold. The mine puts five tons into one and makes a fine concentrate. There is a zinc separator at the mill and the zinc product brings good returns.

The Junta company, under the management of Tallie Thomas, is operating its group so successfully that its experimental milling plant is being improved and its capacity doubled

The recently incorporated Bear Creek Mines Leasing company, composed of half a dozen conservative Telluride men, with ample capital, insures operation of the Adams group and the mill

The Mammoth company, organized recently, its directory comprising Standard Oil interests, has taken over the Mammoth mine and arrangements for permanent operation are near completion. This company plans equipment of the mine with more power drills and extensive development, as well as a remodeled and enlarged milling plant.

STOCK MARKET QUIET AND TONE UNCERTAIN

Pennsylvania Railroad Labor Situation and Flurry in Cotton Are Disturbing Factors.

NEW YORK, July 16.—Dullness and hesitation were dominant in the stock market today The small attendance of brokers was partly responsible, the hot weather adding to the attractions of out-of-town sojourns over the week end The uncertain tone of the market grew out of the labor situation on the Pennsylvania railroad and the indications of the disturbance in the cotton market.

The wheat market was not affected by early reports of further damage to spring wheat, and this factor lost part of its influence in the stock market Cooler weather and rains in parts of the Canadian wheat belt were reported The excitement in the cotton market was ascribed to the speculative position there, rather than to fresh news bearing on the crop Opinions were mixed over the outcome of the Pennsylvania controversy with its employes, but with a hope of a settlement which would avoid a strike The formal announcement of a reduction in wire prices by United States Steel subsidiary gave weight to rumors of the intended cuts in other steel products.

The foreign exchange rate rose slightly today and discounts steadied in London. The tone of the time money market in New York has commenced to relax from its recent stiffness under the influence of the obvious ability of New York to secure gold in London The gold to arrive in London on Monday is expected to be secured in part at least for shipment to New York The firmer tone of exchange was ascribed to this expectation

A sharp rise in the total of idle freight car equipment in two weeks placed the net total at 148,865 cars, the highest figure since August of last year

The bank statement disclosed the actual surplus reserve to have mounted up to over $22,000,000, a heavy influx of cash combining with the loan contraction to widen the ratio of reserves to deposits Such a showing with foreign exchange at the gold import level, must go far to fortify confidence in the amplitude of New York's bank resources to meet all likely demands from the interior

United States bonds were unchanged on call for the week

WHEAT SCORES HIGH RECORD FOR SEASON

CHICAGO July 16.—For the second time in 48 hours the season's high price record for wheat was broken today. It was blistering hot in the northwest, and there were reports that damage to the spring crop was such that a large part of Manitoba would not yield enough for seed Washington state was said to expect less than half a crop A general stampede to buy whirled in many speculators who earlier in the day had sold, believing a decline was imminent Closing quotations were at a net advance of ⅝ to 1⅛ Corn finished ⅜@⅝ to 1⅛c up, oats, ¼c off to ⅛@¼ advance, and provisions, 5c to 22½c down

The wheat market started weak on disappointing cables from Liverpool, where prices were lower, notwithstanding the sensational upturn in America Then, too, showery weather was reported in Russia and light rains in the Canadian northwest But burning temperature was the order of the day in the Dakotas and Minnesota Winter wheat states suffered also though in a different way Rains there curtailed threshing and delayed the marketing of the crops Resting instructions to purchase in case of a break came to light in surprising quantities. Simultaneously some of the foreign shorts bought considerable wheat here Incidentally the English visible supply decreased 2 253 000 bushels Fluctuations were quick and frequent, but during the greater part of the time the market was decidedly above last night's level September reached $1 08¼, which was ⅛ dearer than any previous quotation for the option this year The low point of the day for the same delivery, $1 06⅜@1.06 was scored in the first half hour Closing prices were strong and almost the best of the season, with September ⅝ to ⅝@1c net higher, at $1 07⅞ to $1 07⅞@1 08

Reports from Oklahoma that corn was firing aided a rally in that grain but the chief influence was sympathy with wheat The range for September was from 60⅝@½ to 61⅝ with the close firm at 61½ a net gain of ⅜c The cash market was firm also No 2 yellow closed at 64@64½

In general the oats market followed other grains September kept within limits of 39⅛ and 39⅜, closing ⅛@¼ up at 39⅜@⅜

Pork was down 22½ lard, 5 to 10 and ribs, 10@12½ to 20c
